ANTIAIRCRAF

FIRST ARMY ACTION IN KOREA

Following the events started on Sunday, 25 June, when the North Koreans crossed the 38th Degree Parallel, Lieutenant Colonel William S. Fultz, commanding an AAA AW Battalion in southern Japan, received an order from the Commanding General, Fifth Air Force. Acting on that order Colonel Fultz organized an antiaircraft detachment for "an air transported mission." The exact destination and further details were guarded in close secrecy. Even so, most of the officers and enlisted men in the battalion managed to volunteer for an assignment in the detachment.

As events developed this detachment spearheaded the Army combat units committed to action in Korea.

Flight to Suwon

In the meantime it was learned that the detachment would man four M55s, quadruple caliber .50 machine guns. Three officers and 32 enlisted men were selected for the assignment. Care was exercised to insure that all chosen for the mission had at least six months yet to serve in the Far East Command, but it was later found that two men who had been selected would have to be re-enlisted before they could make the trip . . . So, Sergeant William S. Hasse, Grand Junction, Colorado, and Private First Class Clarence I. Myers, Commodore, Pennsylvania, stood in full field pack, beside the plane which was to carry them to Korea, raised their right hands and were sworn in by Captain Harry F. Mooney, Battalion Adjutant, to extend their enlistments for eligibility on the mission.

Finally on 29 June, details completed, men, ammunition and equipment aboard, Colonel Fultz gave last minute instructions to the detachment commander, Captain Frank J. McCabe, Flushing, New York, and his assistant, 2nd Lieutenant Joseph V. Bailey, Salt Lake City, Utah, and the planes roared down the runway—destination Korea. In a briefing just prior to departure—Major Stanley J. Paciorek, Battalion Executive Officer, had told them that they were to establish air defense of a field in Korea—but particulars were to be given them hours later once the situation was sized up on the spot.

On the way over, most of the men slept or dozed as the ships droned steadily over the Japan Sea, across the coast of Korea and inland over the mountainous terrain toward their destination, the Korean airstrip. Shortly after 0900 hours the planes came in for a touch-down at the field. The men swung into action—so rapidly that many did not have time to remove their "Mae West" life jackets. The M55s were unloaded from each plane as it rolled to a stop on the field and hurriedly established within ten minutes in primary positions, with the aid of the eager assistance of South Korean soldiers. Improvement of positions was being carried out along with other field requirements, assistance still being provided by Korean soldiers; the language barrier being the only problem of fullest cooperation between the Koreans and detachment members.

Enemy Attacks

With the immediate chores of field occupation completed, men of the detachment took time off to survey their new surroundings which for the most part can be described as terrain of hilly to mountainous nature with rice paddied valleys and corridors leading through the ring of hills surrounding the airstrip, with the city lying to the northwest. It looked for the present that no apparent action was pending—but by 1615 hours (29 June) as the sun was dropping behind the hills—the situation in this respect changed. In the distance there appeared what most of the men at the gun positions thought were F-51 "Mustangs"—four of them —but they soon proved themselves otherwise! "Looking toward the town about four miles away we heard an explosion," recounted Sergeant Melvin E. Tyra, Pleasanton, California, "and seconds later we caught it." Captain McCabe, detachment commander, said, "The four planes approached the strip from the northwest at about fourteen hundred feet. They formed with a pair in front followed by the other two in single file and power-glided on our position area, in an apparent attempt to destroy planes parked near the runway. They made four passes, dropping three medium-light bombs, and strafed the field at each pass. One plane crashed beyond the field and the second, obviously crippled, was losing altitude as he left the area. I labeled it a probable, and its destruction was confirmed a short time later by South Korean rural police who reported finding the wreck close to the place where it was last seen."

One plane dove on Sergeant Sidney T. Holman's section and attacked it by dropping bombs in trail. Observers said that a row of cannon shells tore up the earth on both sides of the gun section. Sergeant Hasse got a neat crease in his helmet and Private Harland S. Scoville, Mindoro, Wisconsin, immediately after pulling the operating handle saw it shot away. PFC Thomas Merante, Hudson, New York, received a broken leg from a piece of concrete thrown from the runway by a bomb explosion. Positions had to be selected close to the runway because of rice paddies surrounding the field. The plane was later destroyed and the pilot, a major of the North Korean Air Force, was captured by the police. At no time during the action did any men of the detachment leave the guns.

Crews continued to improve gun positions and all was quiet until 2000 when a "dusk patrol" of three NK fighters came over on two strafing passes. The guns went into action again, but no kills were made. The fighters, now more wary of the ack-ack, fired only short bursts and were driven off after two passes. It was growing dark now and guards were established about the field, supplemented by Korean soldiers. The night passed uneventfully, with the gunners getting a much needed rest, between guard tours.

Early on the morning of the 30th of June another C-47 arrived carrying six communications men headed by Warrant Officer Junior Grade Darrell M. Clagett, Omaha, Nebraska, who immediately began to establish and improve communications under Captain McCabe's direction. Phones were installed to the guns where runners had previously been employed.

That morning a C-54 with much needed supplies and ammunition developed engine trouble just short of the strip, came over, circled and decided not to land, so it returned to its base in Japan. The problem of ammunition and food supply then fell on Captain McCabe's shoulders as he scrounged the area. He secured ammunition from South Koreans and food from other nearby units.

Shortly after 1300 on the 30th, five airplanes appeared.

Captain Phillip LeR. Loomis, a former journalist, served in the ETO during World War II. Much of his service has been in Public Information assignments in which capacity he now serves in the Far East.

Defending an airfield in Korea.

Three were obviously F-80s and two several hundred feet below looked like F-51s. Warrant Officer Clagett asked Captain McCabe, "What are they?" Captain McCabe said, "I'm not sure yet." Clagett continued, "Well, I guess we'll know if they peel off and start shooting." As he voiced the final word, the two lower planes did just that! The guns immediately took them under fire, but no kills were made, as they splattered the area with small 23mm cannon shells which burst upon impact, spraying pellets. One of these inflicted a slight wound on PFC Lawrence E. Rogers, Searcy, Arkansas. The F-80s gave chase and shot down the two strafers. Most members of the detachment expressed difficulty in distinguishing between North Korean fighters and F-51 "Mustangs," and were obliged to depend largely on the hostility of action of airplanes of this type before taking them under fire.

Evacuation Order

The afternoon of the 30th following the attack was quiet, with no "dusk attack" as of the day before. By 2115 word was received from Advanced Command, GHQ, FEC, then under command of Brigadier General John Church, to prepare to evacuate the airstrip. It was also learned that the South Korean line had been penetrated by North Korean Ground Forces.

Orders were relayed to gun sections to prepare for the movement and three trucks were obtained from South Korean Army personnel at the field to evacuate the detachment to a new location. Guns were rendered inoperational, as ordered, and the convoy moved out quietly without lights, en route to the south. The convoy had moved some fifteen miles down the highway picking up Korean civilian vehicles, all obviously going the same direction. A halt was called and Captain McCabe was given orders to provide a rear guard action which called for a 45-minute wait. The purpose of this action, McCabe learned later, was to provide protection for the ADCOM, GHQ. On the move again difficulty with the Korean trucks made it necessary to abandon the three originally procured—the last about 25 miles from our destination. By a system of walking and shuttling, the detachment finally reached its southern destination.

Unloading in a hurry.

During the stay at the new headquarters location, which lasted until the night of July 2d, members of the detachment worked with other personnel around the area. It was 2000 hours that night when word was received that the detachment which had participated in the first organized ground combat action in Korea was to be airlifted back to Japan for re-equipping and return to action. When they returned to their home station, Colonel Fultz and the rest of the battalion welcomed them with a steak dinner with all the trimmings at the service club.

Purple Heart Medals were awarded to Captain McCabe; Lieutenant Bailey; Corporal Burley T. Blankenship, Richlands, Virginia; Private First Class Thomas Merante; Private First Class Frank A. Pierce, Marinier Harbor, New York; and Private First Class Lawrence E. Rogers.

At this writing most of the original detachment are back in Korea. Like other antiaircraft, they have no Korean planes to engage, but they are busily engaged in ground support roles with the divisions.

AAA Unit Effective As Infantry Support

By Corporal Robert H. Sykes

With the absence of an enemy air force, the 1st Cavalry Division's Antiaircraft Artillery unit has another mission in the Korean conflict.

Lt. Elliott B. Hill of Texarkana, Texas, platoon leader who first committed his heavily armed half-tracks in the battle of Yongdong stated: "We were assigned to protect the flanks of the Field Artillery at Yongdong, but we also had to support the Infantry on several occasions in the same area. In our first encounter with the enemy, bands of guerrillas swept in on our flanks and we had to shoot our way out of it. To do this, our gunners used their antiaircraft guns as ground weapons."

When they were required to break up a roadblock to withdraw, PFC Howard L. Swailes, Rome, Iowa, had to crawl through intense mortar fire from one track to another to give the location of the enemy and directed the fire that destroyed them. Swailes is a radio operator and driver of a half-track, which he has affectionately dubbed "Guardian Angel."

PFC Alfred Dillingham of Marion, North Carolina, told of having used the half-tracks to tow heavy artillery pieces to their new positions when trucks weren't available. "One time," he revealed, "one of the artillery outfits was set up in a dry river bed and was swamped by a flash flood. Most of the howitzers and heavy equipment would probably have been seized by the enemy if it hadn't been for the half-tracks which pulled them to safety."

In addition to being an all-round heavy-duty vehicle, every half-track is a formidable fortress of defense and fire power. Cannoneer PFC Donald Harrison, Cincinnati, Ohio, explained that the four caliber .50 machine guns mounted behind an armor shield on the track are capable of downing a plane in flight and added, "They're just as effective against ground troops, we've found, especially the mass attacks used by the Reds."

Sgt. Keith McFarland, Fairfield, Iowa, said the half-track crews have been used mainly as a perimeter defense and security guard for artillery battalions.

"We haven't had any enemy planes to shoot at yet," Sgt. McFarland said, "but if they do show up, we'll be ready for them. And meanwhile, we'll fight as infantry and support the artillery."—Reprinted with permission from The Army Times, 26 Aug. 1950.

General Marquat Among Key Staff Officers With General MacArthur Since Corregidor

In a feature article by Ray Falk, the North American Newspaper Alliance released information on "Men Around MacArthur" recently.

Three members of the Far East Commander's top staff have served with him continuously since 1941. They escaped by PT boat from Corregidor with him and fought their way up to Japan from Australia under him.

Prominent among the top advisors on FECOM staff is Corregidor veteran Maj. Gen. William F. Marquat, who throughout the last war was MacArthur's antiaircraft officer, a title he still retains. He has been decorated for the performance of his ack-ack guns during the early days of the Pacific war. With the loss of our air power, Marquat's AA fire was our only defense against hundreds of Japanese planes.

General Marquat heads MacArthur's economic and scientific section. Although he would rather fight in Korea than hold down a desk job, on Marquat's shoulders now falls the greatest share of the occupation duties, since rehabilitation of the Japanese economy is today's prime aim of the occupation.

Born 56 years ago in St. Louis, Marquat once was automobile editor of the Seattle Times. He still carries a Seattle press card. A great baseball fan, he has contributed much to the development of this game among the Japanese.

A PLAN FOR RADAR MAINTENANCE

By Captain Jack E. Vaughn, Arty. USNG

The Radars SCR 584 are the eyes and ears of the anti-aircraft artillery gun battalion. They require constant care and talented attention.

Radar maintenance is essentially a battalion problem. The whole plan of coordination and training should be approached from that level. Battalion is best equipped to make fast radar repairs, particularly under combat conditions, because of the unit replacements available in the battalion spare parts. Sheer bulk and weight prohibit the issue of the complete unit replacements at the battery level. The battery is equipped with sufficient tools, equipment and spare parts to effect the repair of defective parts but cannot replace the whole units. Consequently, the most efficient radar maintenance plan will take full advantage of the personnel, tools, equipment and spare parts available to the battalion as a whole. With a sound battalion radar maintenance plan, the battery-level problem is greatly simplified.

The unit commander, in most cases, will not be a technician capable of giving his radars the constant care and protection which they require. He must rely on his radar personnel. The most highly skilled radar maintenance man in the battalion should be assigned as the battalion radar maintenance mechanic. He coordinates the battalion radar maintenance plan, instructs and trains the other radar maintenance personnel under the supervision of the battalion radar officer. Each battery requires a qualified radar maintenance sergeant, and that job will keep him busy. Unfortunately, qualified personnel are not always available in the battery for such assignment. Every effort should be made to qualify men by attendance at school and more important still, by on-the-job training. However, by approaching the problem of radar maintenance from the battalion level, either with or without the assistanse of a Signal Radar Maintenance Unit, we obtain the maximum maintenance with the talent available. If a Signal Radar Maintenance Unit is attached they work directly under the supervision of the battalion radar officer.

The mission of all radar maintenance is to keep the radars operational. The personnel, tools and equipment provided in the T/O & E are adequate to accomplish this mission if their use is properly planned. Before outlining in detail this plan for radar maintenance, let us examine the duties and responsibilities of the radar maintenance personnel at the battery.

The battery radar mechanic is responsible for first echelon maintenance only. This consists of tuning, alignment, replacement of defective tubes, cleaning and preserving, entries in the maintenance log and supervision of the operation log.

In addition to the supervisory duties mentioned heretofore, the battalion mechanic is responsible for first echelon maintenance on all of the radar spare parts and spare units in the battalion supply. This includes periodic rotation of the spare units in the headquarters battery radar to make sure that they remain operational. He is responsible for the submission of requisitions for radar spare parts for the entire battalion and for the maintenance of stock record accounts on these parts.

This plan for radar maintenance can best be outlined by using a sample problem as an example. Suppose the radar at Battery A goes haywire. The radar mechanic in Battery A does three things in this order:

1. Localizes the trouble within the radar, i.e., range unit, receiver, transmission lines.
2. Notifies the battalion radar officer or in his absence, the battalion radar mechanic.
3. Attempts to repair the radar by alignment or by replacing tubes.

I want to emphasize point two before proceeding further. The battalion must be notified of the radar failure before time is consumed in attempted repairs. World War II experience proved that more operational time was lost by failure to call upon battalion for assistance immediately upon failure than time consumed in repairs. It's far better to call for battalion assistance and not need it than to need it and not have it.

Continuing with our sample problem, we move now to the battalion level to examine the action taken there upon receipt of the advice from Battery A that the radar is defective. The battalion radar mechanic will take the necessary replacement units to Battery A and with the aid of the battery mechanic, install them and get the radar operational. This accomplishes the principal mission of radar maintenance—the radar is once again on the air!

The battalion mechanic then returns the defective unit to the battalion maintenance shop, or if available the SRMU, for repair. Parts for the repair of the defective unit will be drawn from the battalion supply. When the defective unit is repaired and tested it is placed in the battalion supply. There is no need to be concerned about the serial numbers of the various radar units except to see that upon installation, numbers are entered into the maintenance log of the radar concerned. These serial numbers are not used in supply accountability.

In the event of a major radar breakdown in one of the gun batteries, the headquarters battery radar will be used to replace the defective gun-battery radar. The battalion will be responsible then for the repair or evacuation of the defective radar. It should be emphasized that the gun batteries have priority on operational radars.

The few principles outlined in this plan are simple, but they have proven to be sound in combat.

Captain Jack E. Vaughn graduated from OCS at Camp Davis, N. C. and was commissioned a second lieutenant in June 1942. He served as radar officer of the 161st AAA Gun Battalion in New Guinea and the Philippines. He is now on active duty as radar officer of the 260th AAA Group, D.C. N.G.

The One-Twenty Millimeter Gun

By First Lieutenant Elmo E. Cunningham, Arty.

The requirements of the Antiaircraft Artillery are greater and more diversified than ever before. Its general mission to attack and destroy hostile targets in the air, on the ground, and on the water means that AAA will continue to perform diversified roles with the field combat forces in all theaters of war, and at the same time in conjunction with the Air Defense Command maintain an extensive air defense wherever required.

To accomplish this big job we need the best weapons that can be developed. We also need to exploit the maximum capabilities of the weapons by a thorough understanding of their operation and use.

In regard to heavy AAA guns, we have heretofore considered the 90mm gun as being the standard. Its big brother, the 120mm gun has now established itself as a standard weapon. This was particularly evidenced by the AA expansion program which began in 1948. It is interesting to note that farsighted people began work on this weapon as early as 1939 with the purpose of providing a superior gun capable of dealing with any airplane then imaginable; this idea still prevails.

We will confine this discussion to the description and capabilities of the 120mm gun using the 90mm gun as a basis for comparison.

Description

The 120mm gun is a trailer type, mobile weapon weighing about 31 tons in traveling position when mounted on its two dual-wheel bogies. The towing vehicle is a high-speed tractor which weighs 38 tons when loaded with the 13-man crew, and 32 rounds of ammunition.

Time to emplace the gun requires 25 minutes for a well trained gun crew. Hydraulic jacks housed in the side outriggers are used to lift the gun from its supporting bogies before lowering the mount to the ground. A time-consuming part of emplacing is the necessity of racking the gun tube into battery. In the traveling position the gun tube is racked and secured 70 inches out of battery in order to equalize and distribute its weight over both bogies. For this reason the 120mm gun is never fired from its wheels.

The firing stability of the gun is remarkable. In the firing position the mount is supported on the ground by the pedestal and is stabilized by the four outriggers. If the emplacement site is smooth and even, the gun will settle and stabilize itself readily.

A high angle of fire is an essential characteristic of any AAA weapon. The maximum elevation of the 120mm gun is 80 degrees. This is made possible by the fact that the gun proper which consists of the gun and its recoiling parts is supported on its trunnions at the breech end of the gun. Continuous traversing of the top carriage which supports the tipping parts, is made through a complete circle of 360 degrees. The remote control system applies electrical data and power to automatically position the gun in azimuth and elevation under control of the remotely located director. In automatic operation, the remote control system replaces the men necessary to operate the gun manually; however, the system may be set for manual or match-the-pointer method when so desired.

The recoil mechanism, a conventional hydro-pneumatic type using oil and nitrogen gas, functions with smooth and rapid ease in absorbing the force of recoil and returning the gun quickly to battery. Maximum recoil, 39 inches, occurs at 45 degrees elevation; minimum recoil, 33 inches, occurs at minimum elevation. The tube has long recoil slide rails which ride in greased guide ways, and thus controls the path of recoil and holds recoil bucking action to a minimum. The recoiling characteristics of the gun are very satisfactory and largely contribute to the firing stability of the weapons.

The fuze setter-power rammer is an ingenious mechanism peculiar only to the 120mm gun. This device will automatically set a fuze and load a round in one cycle of two steps; or will omit the fuze setting process altogether if desired as when firing V-T ammunition. The ammunition is a special type which consists of two separate increments, the projectile and the sealed cartridge case. These are placed separately on the loading tray, and when the gunner pulls a clutch control lever, the fuze setter advances, sets the fuze, and retracts itself; the tray drops into line with the breech and the complete round is rammed into the chamber in one sweeping motion by the "mechanical arm" of the power rammer. The fuze setter-power rammer is mechanically complex and has been a source of malfunctions in the field. However, modifications and improvements are constantly improving its operation.

The hydro-pneumatic type equilibrator system on the 120mm gun is a departure from the conventional use of mechanical spring arrangements. This mechanism at times becomes somewhat temperamental in its functioning, and therefore deserves special attention.

All artillery guns require an equilibrator system, a mechanism which will counterbalance the weight of the overhanging tube, and mechanically equalize the effort required to elevate and depress the gun. The pulling energy of the perfect equilibrator system must vary proportionately with the changing weight of the gun tube as it is elevated and depressed. As the gun is elevated the center of gravity moves rearward toward the trunnions, thus requiring less energy to compensate for balance.

The hydro-pneumatic equilibrator system derives its pulling energy through the use of two chains attached to the rear end of the cradle and further connected to piston rods and pistons which are housed in cylinders. A pressure tank located between the two cylinders is primarily filled with nitrogen gas under pressure, and in direct surface contact with a smaller volume of oil. The oil, under pressure, passes through manifold tubes into the cylinders and acts with hydraulic force against the rear of the pistons. As the gun is elevated requiring less balancing energy, the pistons move forward and a constant amount of oil is forced from the pressure tank into the cylinders. As the oil leaves the tank, the gas volume expands causing the gas pressure to decrease; thus, variable equilibrator pull is obtained throughout the elevating cycle.

If the gas expands too much or too little; or, too rapidly or too slowly because of an improper volume relationship between gas and oil, the gun will be in an unbalanced condition. Radically changing air temperatures, and sun heat create a troublesome effect on the system. Even work heat caused by gas compression during operation has a noticeable but not serious effect.

The original 120mm gun was equipped with only one central tank for gas and oil. There were no arrangements for compensating for changes in temperature resulting in changes of gas pressure. This meant that when the gun crew found the gun hard to elevate in the morning because of gas contraction overnight, the only remedy was to add nitrogen and reestablish the gas pressure. Then during the heat of the day, the gas would expand and the gun would be difficult to depress. This time the only remedy to reestablish gas pressure was to bleed nitrogen from the pressure tank. This naturally resulted in extra work and a wasteful consumption of nitrogen gas.

What greatly helped was the addition to the system of the pressure control unit, which consists of an oil reservoir tank, a fixed-displacement hydraulic pump driven by a ¾ horsepower electric motor, and a valve control assembly. The pressure control unit, which will compensate for a

120mm Gun Battery on Firing Range

120mm Gun March Order

45-degree temperature range, is so designed that when the gun becomes unbalanced, the unit is turned on and within several minutes the gun is automatically balanced. If the gun is muzzle heavy, oil is moved from the reservoir into the pressure tank thus decreasing gas volume and increasing its pressure. If the gun is muzzle light, oil is automatically transferred from the pressure tank back to the reservoir. Once the balanced condition is established, continued running of the pressure control unit has a neutral effect on the gas pressure.

At any time when oil is pumped from the pressure tank where it is in direct contact with gas, it will be aerated to some extent upon arriving at the reservoir. Under certain conditions excessive foaming of the oil will occur. This will result in a small loss of gas which liberates itself from aerated oil and escapes out through an air filter on top of the reservoir. Experience has shown that these faults are not serious and that intelligent use and care of the system has resulted in satisfactory operation.

A common fault on the part of using personnel is excessive operation of the pressure control unit. If, after a total of ten minutes of running the unit the gun isn't balanced, something is wrong. Gas pressure can be established by using personnel, but beyond this Ordnance should make the corrections. For best operating results in most climates, the equilibrator system should be checked and adjusted by Ordnance three times a year to take care of seasonal changes; if this is done a minimum of trouble will occur.

An idiosyncrasy of the 120mm gun worthy of mention is breech-dial elevation difference. The M10 director sends dial elevation to the gun; however, the actual breech or quadrant elevation of the gun tube is different from the dial elevation and has varying values throughout the elevating cycle. Some artillerymen believe that this breech dial elevation difference, inherent in the gun, can be ignored—that it can be corrected for in trial fire. It is true that it can be for the quadrant elevation at which the trial fire problem was conducted, but this method of correction will not apply for all other elevation values in the field of fire. The best solution is to compensate for the difference when orienting the gun. Orient at 800 mils elevation which is near the elevation midpoint, and where the breech-dial elevation difference is 3 mils. In other words, set 803 mils on the gunner's quadrant but in turn set 800 mils on the elevation dial of the gun.

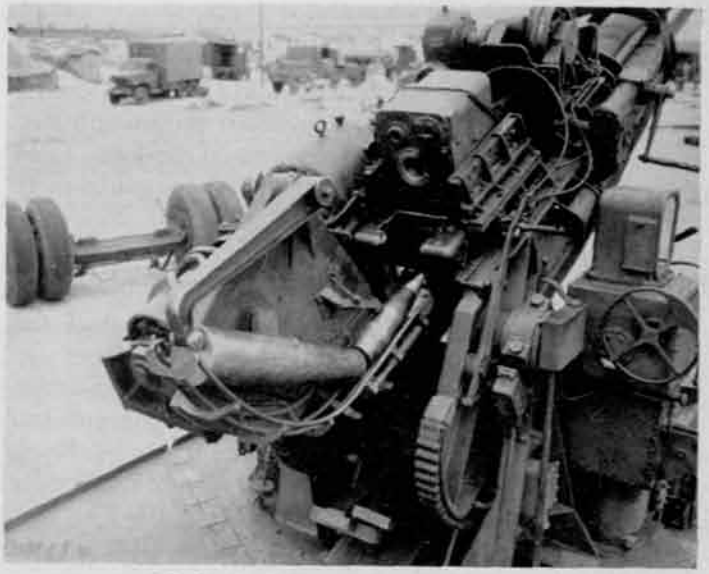
Capabilities

We will consider the capabilities of the 120mm gun in two respects: firing and mobility characteristics.

The maximum vertical range is 19,150 yards and the maximum horizontal range, ground impact, is 27,162 yards. Note that this latter figure is almost 15 miles. At the present time these are beyond maximum effective ranges for AAA fire because of prediction limitations of the fire control equipment. Under good conditions a 120mm gun battery can deliver 20 seconds of effective fire on a conventional airplane flying at an altitude of 40,000 feet.

The rate of fire is from 10 to 15 rounds per minute. This is remarkable for a gun of this size but it is a serious limitation in terms of AAA fire because of the critically short time available to deliver fire on a fast flying target. This rate of fire is so limited because of the weight and size of the ammunition, and the method of setting fuzes and loading rounds. The maximum rate of fire attained is dependent on three principal factors. First the state of training of the gun crew; that is, the ease and speed attained in placing ammunition on the loading tray, and the skill and coordination of the gunner in controlling the automatic loader and manually firing the piece at the instant it is loaded. Another factor is whether or not mechanical-time fuzes are being used, requiring the use of the automatic fuze-setter. The third but less important factor is the magnitude of the fuze being set.

Mobility of the 120mm gun is the most limiting factor in tactical employment. 120mm gun battalions are semi-mobile in character because of insufficient organic transportation to move in one march—batteries have to be moved in echelon by shuttling methods. The standard speed of the M6 tractor when towing the gun on good primary roads is 15 miles per hour; across firm terrain, four miles per hour is optimum. To move a complete battalion a distance of 100 miles, using organic transportation, is a major move which under adverse conditions may require five days or more. Shipment by rail or water is the most efficient means of movement involving distances over 100 miles.



Mechanical Arm of Power Rammer

Prior to road movement, a detailed reconnaissance is mandatory; it should include every part of the route from the initial point of departure to the individual emplacement sites for each gun. River bridges other than those encountered on the best of primary roads present the greatest problems. When a bridge is less than a 70-ton capacity the necessary expedient is to unhook the tractor from the gun and move each across separately. The gun is towed from the opposite shore by means of a bridge-length cable. Elaborate reinforcement of bridges by engineers is a normal requirement in areas where streams are numerous.

Soft muddy terrain and deep sand are problematic but not serious for short distances. When occupying a battery position under these conditions it is best to guide each gun straight to its emplacement site and "drop it." Avoid maneuvering and turning movements as much as possible, but when necessary, make the turns as wide as any restricted area will permit. The dual-wheel bogies equipped with large balloon tires provide excellent flotation; however, when making a short turn in soft terrain, the inside track on the tractor tends to slide, spin, and burrow.

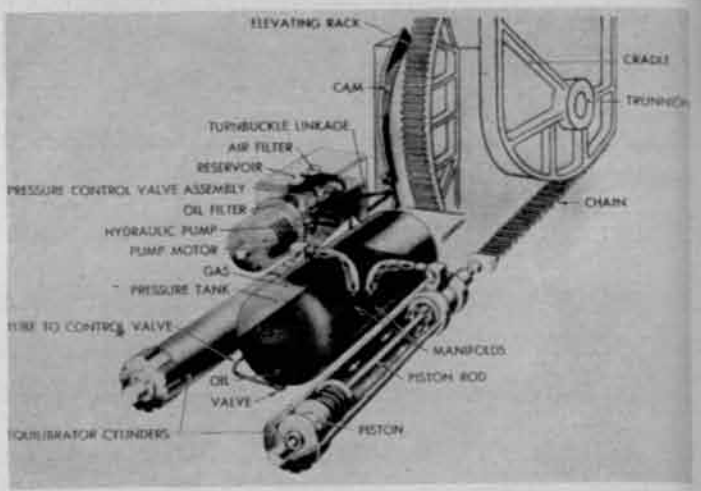
So far we have dealt with the 120mm gun, in order to become familiar with its characteristics, certain peculiarities, and its capabilities and limitations. To better appreciate and understand these factors we will compare the 120mm gun with the 90mm gun by considering their favorable characteristics.

As a result of extensive firing tests conducted with both guns under controlled conditions, analysis revealed that the 90mm gun was slightly more accurate within its limited ranges than the 120mm gun. Just why this is true is not entirely known. Matériel errors from various sources create a cumulative error which is difficult to analyze; accuracy is by no means limited to the gun itself but involves all of the related battery equipment. Theoretically, the greater muzzle velocity of the 120mm gun should give it a prediction advantage over the 90mm gun. It appears that the accuracy capability of the 120mm gun has not as yet been fully exploited.

The lethality or extent of damage which a certain projectile burst can inflict at various distances from an aircraft is of primary consideration. A large airplane can absorb a great amount of damage at times without becoming a loss. The 120mm projectile weighs 50 pounds as compared to 24 pounds for the 90mm projectile. If the 90mm gun is more accurate at certain ranges, the greater blast and fragmentation effect of the 120mm projectile will greatly compensate for the difference.

The rate of fire of the 90m gun is twice that of the 120mm gun; however, in terms of total rounds per engagement the 120mm gun can compensate for the difference under certain conditions. For instance the 90mm gun can deliver about 20 seconds of effective fire on a target flying at 30,000 feet altitude, whereas the 120mm gun can fire for 35 to 40 seconds on the same target.

How many of what type of gun batteries are required and how should they be placed in AAA defense in order to inflict a desired rate of attrition on an attacking enemy air force? Or, with a limited amount of matériel available, how can the maximum possible attrition rate be obtained? These questions and their carefully computed answers form the basis of our new tactical doctrine for heavy AAA defense. Factors involved are the size of defended area, expected altitude of attack, terrain limitations, and primarily the single shot probability for each type of gun. The single shot probability is the computed and analyzed probability of one round destroying an aircraft based on the combination of lethality and accuracy for each particular gun under various combinations of attack conditions.



Phantom View: Equilibrator system with pressure control unit

The greater range of the 120mm gun will necessitate fewer batteries of this type to defend a given area against high altitude attacks. Its greater range also lends itself to more flexibility in the disposition of firing units in an AAA defense plan where terrain limitations are imposing factors.

When comparing the mobility of the two guns we are dealing with their greatest basic difference. The 90mm gun is fully mobile; it is one-half the weight, and has over twice the road speed of the 120mm gun which is classified as a semimobile weapon.

CONCLUSION

In light of the foregoing comparison of the two guns, certain broad principles in terms of general employment appear obvious.

The 90mm gun is the mobile and versatile weapon. Its tactical flexibility lends itself to field operations to include defense of river crossings, amphibious operations, and beachheads—in other words, defense against enemy tactical air force strikes on corps and army installations in the field.

The lack of mobility but greater range capabilities of the 120mm gun indicates that its best use is in permanent and semipermanent defenses such as in theater communications zones and particularly in the air defense of the zone of interior. It is against such areas that enemy strategic air forces flying in mass and at high altitudes are directed.

We must appreciate the fact that the 120mm gun and the 90mm gun are both indispensable in performing the diversified roles imposed by the AAA mission. Above all, the limitations peculiar to each gun must be acknowledged and respected.

General John L. Homer, Fort Bliss Commander, Retires

Major General John L. Homer retired on 30 September after 43 years of active service in the Army. His successor in command of the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Center is Major General John T. Lewis.

General Homer departed Fort Bliss on 24 September for Chicago, Illinois, where he will serve as the Deputy Director of Civil Defense. His address temporarily is: c/o Museum of Science and Industry, 57th and South Lake Shore Drive, Chicago 37, Illinois. Due to illness Mrs. Homer departed for Chicago earlier in the month.

Honoring General Homer, the troops at Fort Bliss turned out in review on 20 September. This review was attended by a huge throng of his civilian and military friends from El Paso, City of Juarez, and vicinity. In the evening, following the review, a reception was held at the Fort Bliss Officers Mess. The Chamber of Commerce and the civic clubs of El Paso held a farewell party for General Homer at the El Paso Country Club on September 23d.

The achievements at Fort Bliss during General Homer's command constitute a splendid chapter in the history of Antiaircraft Artillery.

Shortly after the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Center was established at Fort Bliss in July 1946, General Homer, then Deputy Commander of the Panama District, was named as its first Commanding General. He also became Commandant of the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Branch of The Artillery School and President of Army Field Forces Board No. 4. When he took over these new assignments General Homer found himself faced with a multitude of problems comparable to those under mobilization conditions.

The problems which faced the new Commanding General of Fort Bliss and its associated activities included: (1) planning, organizing and training of the U. S. Army's first Guided Missile units; (2) expanding the Antiaircraft Artillery in the Zone of the Interior twentyfold; (3) provision for family housing for his officers and men; (4) extension of ranges and maneuver areas to accommodate the expanded antiaircraft and guided missile program; (5) establishing new courses and expanding the facilities of the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Branch of The Artillery School; (6) supervising and expediting studies and projects through Army Field Forces Board No. 4, with a view toward improving and obtaining new antiaircraft artillery and guided missiles weapons and equipment; (7) furnishing logistical support and solving administrative problems pertaining to activities at Fort Bliss; (8) regaining the confidence and support of the civilian community and the

TO THE OFFICERS, MEN AND CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF FORT BLISS:

It is with extreme regret that I conclude my 43 years of active service with the U. S. Army and with special regret that I leave what has become one of my most interesting and pleasant assignments ....that of Commanding General of the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Center, Commandant of the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Branch of The Artillery School and President of Army Field Forces Board No. 4 at Fort Bliss.

The problems which arose during the expansion and organization of the Antiaircraft Artillery and Guided Missile Center were difficult ones and could not have been solved without the whole-hearted and capable support of every officer, enlisted man and civilian employee. The way in which these difficulties were solved is a tribute to every member of this command and I wish to express my gratitude for the fine cooperation and able assistance to everyone concerned.

Upon conclusion of my active service, one thought will remain uppermost in my heart and mind....the well-being of the Armed Forces of the United States.

further development of good will with the citizens of Mexico.

Operating with a small staff and without benefit of previous experience in this field, General Homer directed the organization of the first unit to employ guided missiles in tactical employment. This unit was brought to a high state of training and subsequently reorganized into a regiment, and later a group, to prepare for service firing of all types of rockets to perform necessary experimental work.

During General Homer's command the Guided Missile course was organized at the AA and GM Branch of The Artillery School. This is the only course of its nature, and selected personnel of the Army, Navy and Air Force have received training and instruction in this field.

As Commanding General of the Army's only Antiaircraft Artillery Training Center, General Homer was called upon to plan and direct the expansion of Antiaircraft Artillery from one group and two battalions to the present Army strength in AAA, with supporting troops. The normal difficulties of this expansion were aggravated by lack of enlisted personnel in both quantity and quality of the types required as cadres for the newly organized units and a serious shortage of Antiaircraft Artillery officers.

The necessity for conducting basic training for large numbers of fillers required for new units, the serious shortage of housing for units and for families of personnel, and serious shortages of material and equipment further complicated the expansion program. In spite of these and other difficulties, General Homer carried out the expansion, brought the new units to a high state of training, and in addition, trained thousands of individual replacements for assignment overseas and to other commands.

A constant concern for the welfare of the personnel of his command was an outstanding feature of General Homer's leadership. He was one of the first to realize that the alleviation of inadequate and unsatisfactory housing conditions in and around military reservations was a basic requirement for improving the caliber of Army personnel and for maintaining a high morale and reenlistment rate. His action brought about better conditions at Fort Bliss and in the neighboring communities to provide satisfactory housing conditions.

General Homer appointed a housing board at the Post to make a thorough study of the entire housing situation. As a result of the study he instituted a drive which resulted in providing Fort Bliss with 211 prefabricated homes for noncommissioned personnel and their families, the first project of its kind in the military service. A private trailer park to accommodate 200 families and sufficient trailers from Government sources to accommodate 300 additional families were the direct results of General Homer's interest in providing accommodations for military personnel and their families. After more than fifteen months of delay, an 800-unit housing project for Fort Bliss was processed under the Wherry Bill to become the first project of its kind to be completely processed through the Federal Housing Authority.

As a result of General Homer's housing program on the post and his efforts with civilian builders which sparked the largest year of home construction the City of El Paso had ever known, the morale of military personnel at Fort Bliss was greatly improved. The result was a saving to the Army of hundreds of trained and experienced noncommissioned officers whose services were urgently needed, but who would not have reenlisted at Fort Bliss had not the living conditions for families been alleviated.

The accelerated Guided Missile program and the Antiaircraft Artillery expansion program brought about the need for additional firing ranges and maneuver areas. As a result of General Homer's efforts, Antiaircraft Range No. 2 (McGregor Range), of approximately 353,000 acres, and maneuver areas aggregating 125,000 acres, were obtained for military use. Successful acquisition of land was due, in a large measure, to his intimate knowledge of this area and the cordial relationships he had established with ranch operators and landowners in Western Texas and Southwestern New Mexico.

General Homer was primarily responsible for the development of Army-Community relations in the El Paso area that have been a model for Army-Community relations throughout the United States.

Early in General Homer's tour at Fort Bliss he recognized the necessity of developing strong and lasting friendly relations with the Mexican communities in the vicinity of Fort Bliss and El Paso. The esteem and good will he established with the Mexican Army and people were demonstrated when, in the City of Juarez, Mexico, on May 5, 1949, he was awarded the Military Medal of Merit, the highest award given by the Mexican Army.

After a short tour of duty at Fort Bliss, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., in a report to the Chairman of the Armed Services Committee of the U. S. Senate, evaluated General Homer as follows: "In command of this enterprise, with its population of 22,000 people and its treasury of human intelligence, is Major General John L. Homer, a professional soldier in the finest sense of the word. His technical knowledge, his administrative capacity, his ability to meet an issue, his ingenuity and vigor and his vision all make him a fine public servant. It is most distressing to think that the Government is going to be deprived of his services in this vital and difficult field because of the fact that the law requires him to retire next October."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF MAJOR GENERAL JOHN L. HOMER

Born September 16, 1888, in Mount Olive, Illinois, General Homer was graduated from the United States Military Academy and commissioned a second lieutenant of Coast Artillery on June 13, 1911.

In World War I, serving with 6th Coast Artillery, he participated in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives as battery and battalion commander of the first American G.P.F. units.

Between the wars General Homer graduated from the Coast Artillery School, Command and General Staff, the Army Industrial College and the Army War College. He also served in important assignments at West Point, San Francisco, Chicago, and Washington.

On June 20, 1939, he took command of the 61st Coast Artillery (Antiaircraft) at Fort Sheridan, Illinois.

Promoted to the temporary rank of brigadier general on April 7, 1941, he was assigned to command the 40th Coast Artillery Brigade at Fort Sheridan.

From August 1941 to September 1942, he served as Chief of Staff, Iceland Base Command, and subsequently was awarded the Legion of Merit, "for exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding service" in that capacity.

He became a major general on August 3, 1942.

After his return to the United States he became Commanding General, New York-Philadelphia Sector, Eastern Defense Command, with station at Fort Hamilton, New York, and in February, 1944, was named Commanding General, Southeastern Sector, Eastern Defense Command, at Raleigh, North Carolina. In April, 1944, he was assigned to the Fourth Air Force, San Francisco, California, as Commanding General of the 4th Antiaircraft Command. He became Deputy Commander of the Panama Department in January, 1945.

He continued in this capacity until July, 1946, when he assumed command of the AAA and Guided Missile Center at Fort Bliss.

He has been awarded the following American and foreign decorations: Distinguished Service Medal; Legion of Merit; Army Commendation Ribbon; Ecuadorian Order of Arban Calderon, First Class; Panamanian Vasco Nunez de Balboa, Grand Officer; Chilean Order Al Merito (Gran Official); and the Medal of Military Merit, Mexico's highest military award, given by President Aleman.

General Homer also received an honorary degree of LL.D. from Blackburn College, in 1948.

Annual Coast Artillery Party

The officers and ladies, still nourishing happy memories of the Coast Artillery, continue the tradition of an annual social party in Washington.

The family reunion will be held this year at the Army and Navy Country Club, Friday, 24 November at 7:00 P.M. The signs indicate a corker.

Those who can arrange to be in Washington on that date should notify the Journal Editor.

JOURNAL HONOR ROLL CRITERIA

1. To qualify for a listing on the JOURNAL Honor Roll, units must submit the names of subscribers and total number of officers assigned to the unit on date of application.
2. Battalions with 80% or more subscribers among the officers assigned to the unit are eligible for listing, provided that the unit consists of not less than 20 officers.
3. Brigades and groups with 90% or more subscribers among the officers assigned to the unit are eligible for listing, provided that the unit consists of not less than seven officers.
4. Units will remain on the Honor Roll for one year even though they fall below the 80% requirement during the year.
5. Lists of subscribers and statement of number of assigned officers must be submitted annually by units in order to remain on the Honor Roll.
6. Battalions with 90% of officers subscribing will qualify for one star placed before the unit's designation on the Honor Roll. Battalions with 100% subscribers will qualify for two stars.
7. Groups and brigades cannot qualify for one star but may qualify for two stars with 100% subscribers.

GUERRILLA*

By Colonel Samuel B. Griffith, II, USMC

PART I

Orthodox military thought has consistently deprecated the achievements and potentialities of partisan or guerrilla operations in warfare. It is difficult to discover a basis for this opinion; it is certainly not founded on an objective analysis of history, for experience since Napoleonic times indicates clearly that guerrilla operations can make a decisive contribution to the outcome of a war. Partisans have not won wars in the past nor will they win them in the future. But their activities can be of a magnitude and intensity sufficient to prevent one side or the other from winning.

Guerrillas are a feature common to all ideological wars. Their operations have been a significant aspect of such struggles since the days of our Revolution, and should there be a third great war they will inevitably be of the greatest importance. In a future war in which ideological issues are clearly drawn guerrilla activities will be dispersed over vast areas and will draw sustenance from all levels of populations. The quality of operations will be significantly improved over the past; modern weapons and equipment will make the guerrilla of the future a formidable antagonist in the type of warfare that he will conduct.

For these reasons the history of guerrilla experience cannot be ignored. It was the guerrillas of Spain and Russia quite as much as the generalship of Wellington and Kutuzov that brought Napoleon to St. Helena. This was not appreciated in 1815; it may not be fully appreciated in 1950. Nevertheless, it is true, and it counsels us to more fully acquaint ourselves with partisan theory and partisan action.

The assumption that guerrilla warfare cannot flourish as in the past is faulty. The structure of western industrial society provides a fertile field for partisan operations, and it is a safe assumption that guerrillas of the future will have ample opportunity for extremely effective work.

It is equally incorrect to assume that the airplane has limited either the scope or effectiveness of guerrilla activities. Guerrillas cannot be discovered by aerial cameras or observers and they do not concentrate to present profitable targets to bombardiers or aerial gunners. The airplane proved in the last war that it can be an important instrument for the support of guerrilla operations; it is of little if any use in directly combating them.

In a study of guerrilla war in history we find quite definite patterns constantly recurring. These recurring patterns are to be found on both sides of the cloth, so to speak. That is, they repeat themselves in terms of guerrilla theory and action, and in terms of the steps taken to counter such actions. One finds Mosby in Virginia, Lawrence in Arabia, and Mao Tze Tung in China, three "intellectual" guerrilla leaders, expressing identical tactical theories and putting them with consistent success to the test of action. On the other hand one discovers the French in Spain, Kitchener in South Africa, and the Japanese in North China attempting in turn to suppress guerrilla warfare by measures which were uniformly unsuccessful.

Spain between the years 1808 and 1813 was the scene of nationwide guerrilla operations which in point of intensity and effectiveness have not been equalled in history. Dozens of talented guerrilla leaders were developed, and to their skill and daring Wellington owed a great measure of his success in the Peninsular War. The guerrillas themselves could not have driven the French from Spain, but neither could Wellington have done this without their aid and the Great Duke never deprecated the contributions of the guerrilleros to his success.

Here we see for the first time strategic and tactical coordination between conventional formations of both the army and the navy and organized guerrillas; we may trace the development of poorly equipped bands into well trained, highly mobile, hard striking combat groups, elusive and pervasive as mist. In their independent operations, the Spanish guerrilleros established the general pattern of partisan war with which we are familiar.

Frequently week after week passed with no communication between the Emperor in Paris, the higher headquarters of the French armies in Spain, and their columns operating in the field. Hundreds of couriers carrying official despatches were captured, foraging parties were ambushed and annihilated, and isolated garrisons were overwhelmed in surprise attacks. Supplies for the armies were intercepted, great sums of money were stolen from paymasters, traitors on whom the French relied for information were searched out and summarily executed. These activities produced in

Col. Griffith graduated from the Naval Academy in 1929 and was commissioned in the Marine Corps. Prior to World War II he studied Chinese and served in Nicaragua and China. During the war, he served in England and commanded the First Marine Raider Battalion on Guadalcanal. the French feelings of complete frustration, which in turn caused them to take punitive measures that were ill-considered and served only to intensify resistance. Heavy detachments were required to guard the vulnerable lines of communication, to hold the principal cities and to protect convoys with the result that forces available for the field were reduced in strength. Thus were a few able to immobilize many, to retain the initiative, to create consternation and to produce results out of all proportion to their numerical strength.

The first popular reactions to Napoleon's iniquitous coup d'etat in Spain took place on 24 May, 1808 in the Asturias, the province that was over a hundred years later to contribute the most hard-bitten fighting men in Spain to the Republican ranks.

The first of the great Spanish guerrilleros was Juan-Martin Diaz, nicknamed "El Empecinado," "The Obstinate One," who in the fall of 1809 "raised large bands during the absence of the normal garrisons and swept the countryside capturing convoys and cutting the lines of communication—The French governors on every side kept reporting their perilous position when they could get a message through to Madrid."

The Emperor bombarded his commanders with advice as to how to repress the guerrillas. His orders resulted "in much marching and countermarching of the newly arrived troops but to little practical effect in the way of repression for skilled leaders like Mina, the Empecinado and Julian Sanchez nearly always slipped between the fingers of their pursuers."

Sir Charles Oman estimates that in 1810-11, there were never more than 20,000 guerrillas under arms between the Guadarrama Mountains (north of Madrid) and the Bay of Biscay. Yet he writes: "despite their weakness in the open field . . . they rendered good services to Spain and incidentally to Great Britain and to all Europe by pinning down to the soil twice their numbers of good French troops. Anyone who had read the despatches of Napoleon's 'Military Governments' or the diaries of the officers who served in Reille's or Dorsenne's or Caffarelli's flying columns will recognize a remarkable likeness between the situation of affairs in Northern Spain during 1810 and 1811 and that in South Africa during 1900 and 1911. Lightly moving guerrilla bands unhampered by a base to defend or a train to weigh them down and well served as to intelligence by the residents of the countryside can paralyze the action of an infinitely larger number of regular troops."

By January 1811, Napoleon (who had lost patience with generals unable to suppress the guerrillas in the north of Spain) named Marshal Bessières to command the "Army of the North" and gave him among other missions that of putting an end to the partisans. This proved to be a task quite beyond the means at the Marshal's disposal, and he reported to the Emperor that the guerrilla bands were daily increasing and that if he concentrated as much as a third of his 60,000 effectives to subdue them, all communications would be lost. He concluded this despatch by pointing out that victory in Spain did not depend upon the outcome of a battle with the English, but rather upon the pacification of the country. His master, obsessed with the idea that a brilliant campaign culminating in a climactic battle would bring the war in the Peninsula to an end, was not interested in such reports. He considered Bessières a pessimist. As a matter of fact, the marshal was an optimist.

During the spring and early summer the guerrilleros in the north were receiving arms and equipment from British cruisers operating in the Bay of Biscay and were steadily becoming stronger. The expedients the French adopted to control them were fruitless. Destruction of towns, taking of hostages, devastation of the countryside, execution of prisoners, construction of blockhouses—all were in vain. Occasionally a French flying column managed to catch a guerrilla group unaware and destroy or scatter it—if the latter the partisans soon reassembled none the worse for wear.

The French commander Abbe signalized the opening of the year 1812 by the issuance of a proclamation which prohibited "quarter" for guerrilleros, made their families and villages responsible for them and authorized the execution of hostages. Mina promptly announced that he would shoot four Frenchmen for every Spaniard, a threat that he carried out with punctuality and exactitude. Abbe withdrew his proclamation. The French concentrated 30,000 troops to destroy the partisan chief and his band of 3,000. As the invaders busied themselves trying to track him down, Mina fell upon an immense convoy escorted by a force of 2,000 troops and completely destroyed it. The entire Army of the North spent the remainder of April and the month of May in futile pursuit of this phantom.

Moscow, the capital, beckoned Napoleon. Once the Emperor had established himself in the Kremlin the Tsar would come to terms; he would have to; everyone had always done it that way. He could not comprehend why the Tsar would not sue for surrender after Borodino. He berated the Russian generals as inept fools and cowards because after Borodino they would not stand and fight, but chose instead to fall back slowly laying waste the countryside and arming the peasants. Swarms of hard riding Cossacks and partisans attacked the flanks, rear and trains of the French Army. The people burned the hayricks and villages, drove off the livestock, fired the crops standing in the fields and poisoned the wells. When Napoleon reached Moscow he established himself in the Imperial apartments in the Kremlin from whence he vainly endeavored to convince the Tsar and Kutuzov that Russia was beaten. But the Russians would not agree. Finally, frustrated, and unaware that the march to Moscow was but the prelude to the greatest debacle to be recorded in the annals of military history, the Emperor gave the order for retreat.

From Moscow to the borders of Poland his freezing, starving army fell back through burned-out towns from which all the inhabitants had fled. On the way the columns were continually harassed:

"Cossacks kept up perpetual raids along the roads, which they constantly crossed between one division and another —or even, when there was a gap, between one regiment and another. . . . Wherever transport wagons were moving along in disorder, or unarmed stragglers were making their way as best they could, the Cossacks improvised sudden attacks, killing and wounding, robbing all those whose lives they spared, and looting wagons and carriages when they came upon them.

"It is not difficult to imagine the perturbation spread by such tactics and their effects on the Army's morale. What was worse, they made communications extremely difficult, not only between one division and another. The General Staff, as I have already explained, received no reports; its orders either did not arrive at their destination or if they arrived were too late to be of any use. Staff officers, who braved every sort of danger, were frequently captured. Then there was the ice . . . of the many who went after food, but few returned . . . Cossacks and armed peasants captured many of those stragglers."

Years later Leo Tolstoi in War and Peace described the sombre spectacle of the Grande Armée stumbling down the ice-covered road to Smolensk toward the border of Poland; herded along by Kutuzov, done to death by famine, winter, the blindness of its commander, and the Cossacks and hordes of peasant guerrillas. This is what he wrote about the nature of the death struggles of the French Army, and about the agents who presided at that historic scene:

"The battle of Borodino with the occupation of Moscow and the flight of the French, that followed without any more battles, is one of the most instructive phenomena in history.

"All historians are agreed that the external activity of states and peoples in their conflicts finds expression in wars; that the political power of states and peoples is increased or diminished as the immediate result of success or defeat in war.

"Strange are the historical accounts that tell us how some king or emperor, quarrelling with another king or emperor, levies an army, fights a battle with the army of his foe, gains a victory, kills three, five, or ten thousand men, and consequently subdues a state and a whole people consisting of several millions; and incomprehensible it seems that the defeat of any army, one hundredth of the whole strength of a people, should force that people to submit. Yet all the facts of history (so far as we know it) confirm the truth of the statement, that the successes or defeats of a nation's army are the causes or, at least, the invariable symptoms of the increase or diminution of the power of a nation. An army gains a victory, and immediately the claims of the conquering people are increased to the detriment of the conquered. An army is defeated, and at once the people loses its rights in proportion to the magnitude of the defeat; and if its army is utterly defeated, the people is completely conquered. So (according to history) it has been from the most ancient times up to the present. All Napoleon's earlier wars serve as illustrations of the rule. As the Austrian armies were defeated, Austria was deprived of her rights, and the rights and power of France were increased. The victories of the French at Jena and at Auerstadt destroyed the independent existence of Prussia.

"But suddenly, in 1812, the French gained a victory before Moscow. Moscow was taken, and in consequence of that, with no subsequent battles, not Russia, but the French army of six hundred thousand, and then Napoleonic France itself ceased to exist."

The curtain next rises in the Middle East where Col. T. E. Lawrence—Lawrence of Arabia—developed and applied his theories of guerrilla warfare against the Turks. The British by this time had obviously learned something from history and they empowered Lawrence to dangle the apple of freedom and independence before the eyes of the Arabs in exchange for active participation in the war and the cooperation of the world of nomadic Islam against the Turk.

Lawrence made a unique contribution to military thought. He perceived immediately that one of the great strengths of guerrillas was their pervasiveness; their ubiquity. Guerrillas could be everywhere, but at the same time be nowhere. To permit—indeed to encourage—the enemy to occupy cities and towns was not a bad idea, providing one could isolate them and keep them isolated. This the Arabs did with the Turkish garrison in Medina which sat in trenches destroying its own power of movement by "eating the transport" it "could no longer feed." The guerrillas ranged over 99% of Arabia; Turkish military power decayed in Medina and in their isolated outposts.

Lawrence developed his theory of guerrilla warfare while he lay ill for several months. He was not too ill to reflect.

"I began idly to calculate how many square miles . . . perhaps one hundred and forty thousand square miles. And how would the Turks defend all that? No doubt by a trench line across the bottom, if we came like an army with banners; but suppose we were (as we might be) an influence, an idea, a thing, intangible, invulnerable, without front or back, drifting about like a gas? Armies were like plants, immobile, firm rooted, nourished through long stems to the head. We might be a vapor, blowing where we listed. Our kingdoms lay in each man's mind; and as we wanted nothing material to live on, so we might offer nothing material to the killing. It seemed a regular soldier might be helpless without a target owning only what he sat on, and subjugating only what, by order, he could poke his rifle at.

"Then I figured out how many men they would need to sit on all this ground, to save it from our attack—in depth, sedition putting up her head in every unoccupied one of those hundred thousand square miles. I knew the Turkish army exactly, and even allowing for their recent extension of faculty by aeroplanes and guns and armored trains (which made the earth a smaller battlefield) still it seemed that they would have need of a fortified post every four square miles, and a fort would not be less than twenty men. If so they would need six hundred thousand men to meet the ill wills of all the Arab peoples, combined with the active hostility of a few zealots.

"How many zealots could we have? At present we had nearly fifty thousand: sufficient for the day. It seemed the assets in this element of war were ours. If we realized our raw materials and were apt with them, then climate, railway, desert and technical weapons could also be attached to our interests. The Turks were stupid; the Germans behind them dogmatical. They would believe that rebellion was absolute, like war, and deal with it on the analogy of war. Analogy in human things was fudge anyhow; and war upon rebellion was messy and slow like eating soup with a knife."

Why Are We Fighting In Korea?

The following statement was written exclusively for the Armed Forces by Ambassador Warren R. Austin, United States Representative in the United Nations. Although addressed to the United Nations Forces in Korea, Mr. Austin's statement is of vital importance to every man and woman in the Armed Forces.

UNITED STATES MISSION TO THE UNITED NATIONS

August 25, 1950

To the United Nations Forces in Korea:

You and I have a great deal in common. Although our duties and responsibilities are somewhat different, we are partners in the first international "police action" in history. We are working together to suppress the lawbreakers who have attacked not just Korea, but who have attacked the whole United Nations effort to build a peaceful and a better world. What we do at Lake Success and what you do in Korea affects the future of people everywhere.

Our object together is to halt aggression. The world failed to do that when Hitler and Mussolini and the Japanese were rising to power nearly 20 years ago. Aggression in Ethiopia, Manchuria and Austria went unchallenged. Today the story is different. The United Nations has successfully challenged aggression in a number of instances.

About three years ago war broke out in Greece. It turned out that the Communists were behind it—not just Greek Communists, but Communists from countries north of Greece. The United Nations sent military observers to that northern border and through their eyes the whole world saw that in reality it was Communist aggression from the outside that menaced Greece—and the rest of the world, too. In that instance Greek soldiers, aided by the United States and British equipment, stood off and defeated the Communists for themselves and for the rest of us.

Then, the Communists centered their attack on Berlin. The Soviet Union tried to squeeze the rest of the world out of that city. Illegal force was defeated once more—by a dramatic United States-British-French airlift, by German citizens willing to endure difficult privations, by United Nations peace negotiations.

Korea was next, and the worst of all. What is happening in Korea is part of the Communist effort to dominate the world. Your victory in Korea will be the most crushing setback the Communists have ever received. Your victory will demonstrate that the free peoples of the world are determined that aggression will not be permitted to succeed —even when it is attempted in a place so remote from our homes as Korea. Fifty-three nations are united in recognizing that a battle for freedom and for world law and order is now being fought. We know that aggression must be stopped before it gets a head start if we and the peoples of other countries are to remain free.

WE'RE GETTIN' TOUGHER*

MAJOR FORREST KLEINMAN

KOREA

THEY came at dusk, out of the saffron hills and green rice paddies in front of our battalion's horseshoe position a few miles south of Chinju. They were shooting as they came, charging straight up, screaming between bursts from their automatic carbines. Perhaps they thought that we would be afraid and run away. After all, we had run away before . . . "strategic withdrawal," I think the newspapers call it.

For more than a week we had been executing strategic withdrawals only a jump ahead of them as they'd steam-rollered their way toward the vital Chinju-Masan highway. But we were tired of running, of being afraid, and this time we'd been told to hold.

IT was a lovely position to hold. It had a U of beautiful big hills nicely humped at the closed end to command the fingers and flanks. They were the kind of hills that murder your legs and lungs but save your life. So we climbed those beautiful brutal hills in the scorching sun and dug deep into their rocky slopes and crests. At the open end of the U we placed our pair of tanks to cover the road, and then we waited in the too peaceful hum of that hot summer afternoon for our enemy to come to get us.

Our patrols spotted them while they were still three miles away . . . a long brown column snaking along one of those back roads that aren't supposed to be there according to the Korean maps but always are when the enemy comes after you.

Soon their advance patrols were scurrying around the outskirts of our position, trying to draw fire that would disclose our location and strength. I think they were a little puzzled not to find us along the road or on the forward slopes where they had found us before.

WE'D learned that our front is the four points of the compass and to prepare for attack from any and all of them. We'd learned to fit our tactical doctrine to the ground as it exists in Korea, not to the ground of the textbook examples, and to climb and climb and climb even when we couldn't take another step. We'd learned to hold our fire, to shoot to kill men and not the shadows that come to taunt the imagination at night when a GI and his buddy are alone in their foxhole.

We held our fire now. Even the replacements fresh from the States who'd joined us during the afternoon remembered what they'd been told as they were hurried into the lines. Not a man stirred on the saffron horseshoe of hills. The enemy patrols grew bolder, came closer. Skirmish lines began to form behind them and move forward.

At the battalion command post in the yard of a Korean farmhouse within the horseshoe, the staff listened to the reports that flowed in from the OPs by field phone and radio and they forgot to wipe off the perspiration that dripped from their faces onto their maps.

"Red 3 this is Baker 6 . . . approximately 300 North Koreans are moving onto the ridge opposite my position. Their patrols are starting toward us now . . . Red 3 this is Able 6. Enemy moving in on us from West and Southwest. Looks like at least two companies with machine guns and mortars . . . Red 3 this is Zebra 6. They're closing in fast now. Think they are getting ready to assault. My range is only 400 yards! . . ."

The S-2 and S-3 grinned at each other. Here was the break the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry had been waiting for. The enemy was walking right in with his chin out. He'd become so cocky that he was going to assault without further reconnaissance and without artillery or mortar preparation.

The man upon whom this break depended crouched in his foxhole on the horseshoe, chewing gum from his C ration supper packet. As he peered through the fading light at the gathering figures on the ridge opposite him, he felt for the reassuring touch of his rifle and grenades, and he swore softly.

A GREEN flare went up on the ridge opposite Company C on one finger of our U, followed quickly by another flare from ground facing the base of the arc. A few seconds later all hell broke loose.

Whistles blew and they came down the slopes into the narrow valleys that separated us from them. They disappeared into the curtain of our mortar fire only to reappear suddenly on our forward slopes. The holes torn in their ranks seemed to be filled as if by a quick flowing brown liquid from reservoirs behind them.

The boys from Texas and Kansas and Brooklyn were firing into them as fast as fingers could touch triggers, load magazines, feed machine-gun belts, drop shells into mortar tubes. Tracers laced the purple dusk around them. Bits of their ridge exploded into flashes of light, and jagged metal whined . . .

At the Company C OP the artillery forward observer was calling prepared concentrations onto the rear and flanks of the charging line. A burst of automatic fire hit him in the shoulder, but his voice didn't falter as he spoke into the radio mouthpiece. A few minutes later the enemy silenced him, but not before he had completed his fire orders.

The enemy ranks were ragged now, yet the remnants came screaming over the crest led by a saber-brandishing officer. A burst of automatic carbine fire dropped him. A nearby GI jumped out of his foxhole and beat two others to the saber, then shot his way back to safety.

Grenades popped out of the foxholes like baseballs and took their toll. Here and there along the reverse slope, screams died into gurgles as American bayonets found bellies and throats.

At the close quarters in gun positions and foxholes, the enemy died under smashing rifle butts and the quick desperate thrusts of trench knives.

ABRUPTLY all firing, all of the sound and fury died away . . .

The silence seeped into our numbed and drunken senses like healing balm. The knots in the pits of our stomachs loosened little by little and gradually we became aware of the croak of frogs and insect rustles of the summer night.

We found that we could speak again without choking on pounding blood in our throats, and voices began to drift out of the foxholes:

"We did it! We stopped the bastards!"

"Yeah, they ain't so tough."

"Maybe we're just gettin' tougher."

"Well, let's get some more ammo up here. What's left of 'em will be back at dawn."

"Yeah, but they ain't going no place! . . ."

227th AAA Group At Stewart

Only two sleeve targets out of 13 got away—and they were well cut up—when 90mm antiaircraft guns of the 227th Antiaircraft Artillery Group, Florida National Guard, fired on the ranges of Camp Stewart during summer training.

The 40mm and .50 caliber guns blasted down four out of nine of the new, fast RCAT drones that were used as targets during the encampment, July 2 through July 15.

Eight sleeves were towed by Oklahoma National Guard planes from near-by Hunter Field, Savannah, Ga., during the first day and 227th gunners got seven. The eighth, though ripped up, got away. On the second day of firing, the gunners knocked down four sleeves in two hours and 15 minutes but let the fifth, shot to pieces, get away.

"Some of the best shooting I've ever seen," was the comment of Col. P. L. Wall of Jacksonville, group commander.

The lighter guns had some trouble with the radio-controlled drones, a new type capable of speeds in excess of 250 miles per hour. Regular Army crewmen launched the drones from a new type of ramp, a concrete circular track on which a dolly supported the plane until it reached flying speed. The dolly was controlled by a cable from a steel center post in the circle.

An AAOC (Antiaircraft Operations Center) modeled after the center described in the January-February issue of the ANTIAIRCRAFT JOURNAL passed a field test during a two-week summer encampment here of the 227th AAA Group.

According to Maj. Conrad Mangels, Jr., AAAOC Officer for the group, "There is no publication available on methods and practices for field units; the article was our major guide for setting up our AAOC."

Firing on the big Stewart ranges were the 712th AAA Gun Battalion (90mm) of South Florida; the 265th AAA Gun Battalion (90mm) from West Florida; the 148th AAA AW Battalion (40mm and .50 caliber) from North Florida, attached to the 227th for training though a part of the 48th Infantry Division, and the 115th AAA Gun Battalion (90mm) of Mississippi, also attached.

The 90mm guns of the two Florida battalions expended 3,400 rounds of ammunition and the Mississippi battalion added 600 more rounds firing at targets. In addition 766 rounds were used on trial shot, calibration and ground fire problems.

The 40mm and .50 caliber guns of the 148th expended 5,431 rounds of 40mm ammunition and 94,300 rounds of .50 caliber machine-gun ammunition.

Guardsmen travelled from Florida to Stewart by special train, truck convoy and plane. Mississippi sent their officers and men by train.

Making a precedent-setting flight, were four batteries of the 712th AAA Battalion from South Florida. Men and field equipment enplaned at three fields in South Florida and three hours later landed on Liberty Field, located on the Camp Stewart, Ga. reservation where summer maneuvers were held. Instead of nearly two days by truck convoy, the battalion made the camp trek of nearly 500 miles in a matter of hours.

228th AAA Group, SCNG, at Stewart

Completes Field Training With Flying Colors

By Colonel D. W. Bethea, Jr., SCNG

The 228th AAA Group, South Carolina National Guard, moved to Camp Stewart, Georgia, on June 25, for the third consecutive year of summer training at that station. The Group consisted of Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, commanded by Colonel D. W. Bethea, Jr. of Dillon; the 107th AAA AW Battalion (SP), temporarily commanded by Major E. R. McIver, Jr. of Conway; the 678th AAA AW Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel M. T. Sullivan of Anderson; the 713th AAA Gun Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel B. N. Singleton of Florence; and the 246th Army Band, commanded by CWO Ben Hughes of Greenwood. The following Reserve units from Charleston trained with the Group: 316th AAA Group under the command of Colonel D. M. White, Jr., 376th AAA AW Battalion commanded by Lieutenant Colonel T. J. Thorne and the 331st Operations Detachment commanded by Major H. McLendon.

Troops moved from home stations by motor convoy. Approximately 150 officers and 1,350 enlisted men attended the encampment.

Excellent AAA target practices were conducted by all battalions.

Three B26s and two P51s based at Hunter Field, Savannah, were used for towing and tracking. The OQ 19 RCAT was used as targets for AW firings. Air National Guard units from Little Rock, Arkansas, and Tulsa, Oklahoma, furnished excellent aerial missions.

The 713th AAA Gun Battalion shot down a number of sleeves and obtained several hits with the VT fuzed ammunition.

The 107th and 678th AW Battalions shot down ten OQs. The average life of the RCAT was only three runs across the AW firing line. In addition, the AW battalions fired on towed sleeves and registered numerous hits.

All units participated in antimechanized firing with assigned weapons on an excellent moving target course. The rocket launcher, pistol, carbine and submachine gun were also fired.

The Group executed a two-day field exercise in two phases. The first phase required the setting up of an AAA defense of a hypothetical guided missile launching area. The second phase was a night movement to provide an AAA defense of the local airdrome, Liberty Field. The problem was prepared by the Group instructor. All officers and enlisted men agreed that despite the mud and rain, the field problem was highly profitable.

The Aggressor force, under command of Major James Gallaway, Group S-2, injected the local ground security aspect of combat conditions in realistic fashion. The force consisted of three officers and twenty-five enlisted men. They claimed the capture of a lieutenant colonel (battalion commander), a captain, and a number of NCOs and other enlisted men. The Blue force captured nine members of the Aggressor team.

The success of the camp was facilitated by the able assistance and cooperation of the following Regular Army officials:

Colonel W. A. Weddell, Senior AAA instructor, assisted by Lieutenant Colonels J. S. Albergotti and D. S. Keisler and Major G. R. Evans, Regular Army instructors.

Colonel K. M. Barager, Commanding Camp Stewart, and his staff.

The 43d RCAT Detachment, commanded by Lieutenant Fred Dawson, Fort Benning, Ga.

Instruction teams furnished by the AA & GM Branch of The Artillery School, Fort Bliss, Texas, and by Fort Custer, Michigan.

Distinguished visitors included Major General W. C. Chase, Chief of Staff, Third Army, Major General James C. Dozier, The State Adjutant General, and Brigadier General A. B. Godfrey, Commanding General 51st Infantry Division Artillery. The 107th AAA AW Battalion is an organic unit of the 51st Division but has trained with this Group each encampment.

In attendance and in training value this was the most successful encampment of the 228th AAA Group since the reorganization of the South Carolina National Guard in 1947.

Your Journal

As most of our readers know, two years ago the Infantry Association submitted a proposal for the Armored Cavalry, the Coast Artillery, the Field Artillery and the Infantry Associations to merge into the Association of the U. S. Army and to publish one journal for the combat forces.

This proposed merger involved for all both advantages and disadvantages. Your Executive Council believed, however, that if the merger could be worked out harmoniously, it would serve to further unification within the Army and that the over-all advantages to be gained thereby would outweigh other factors. The Council also realized that the Antiaircraft members desired to support teamwork in this matter. Accordingly, the Council has favored the merger and has participated in conferences and discussions in an earnest effort to work out a sound and equitable basis for such a merger.

The Council believes that the Antiaircraft membership would desire appropriate recognition and participation in the policies and management of the proposed journal. Thus far, however, it has been unable to secure terms which would meet that requirement. The Council stands ready to cooperate further toward a harmonious merger. Should events later offer a proper participation under the proposed merger, the Council will promptly submit the proposal to the membership.

Meanwhile, the main effort at present is being directed toward the continuation of the ANTIAIRCRAFT JOURNAL under existing policies. Appropriate action will be initiated to change the name of the Coast Artillery Association to the Antiaircraft Association.

In January the Armored Cavalry Association voted not to participate in the proposed merger and to continue the publication of their Journal. The Association has now become the United States Armor Association. It publishes the excellent journal, Armor, as the medium for armored warfare.

In August the Infantry and Field Artillery Associations merged to form the Association of the U. S. Army and to publish the United States Army Combat Forces Journal. This excellent monthly is maintaining the high standards of both of its predecessors.

The Infantry School Quarterly at Fort Benning, Georgia, continues to cover in capable fashion the latest thought on technical and tactical matters of interest to the Infantry.

All of these combat magazines give your Antiaircraft Journal valuable cooperation. We wish them continued success.

The Council wishes to thank the many members who have given help and suggestions on the proposed merger. Any further comment will be welcomed.

Delaware Guard at Fort Miles and Bethany Beach

By Lieutenant Jack D. Hunter, Arty., Del. NG

The captain squinted into the humid sky and said: "Those boys are shooting like they're mad at those targets."

As he watched, 40mm tracers needled through the slight haze and clipped shreds from the red nylon tow sleeve with almost scissor-like precision.

"Yes, sir, those boys are hot—I mean hot."

The captain, an ex-combat paratroop officer and now a battery commander in the Delaware National Guard, had dropped in for a chat at the Group CP. He chuckled, then lit a smoke.

"The darndest thing about it all is that they're only high school kids, most of 'em."

The captain just about summed up the performance of Delaware's 261st AAA Brigade at its 1950 training encampment at Fort Miles and Bethany Beach, Del.

His outfit, part of the 945th Automatic Weapons Battalion, was putting up a show that was typical of all other units in the brigade.

To the south, on a strip of sand at Bethany the 90mm guns were also busy making targets unusable. There, the 736th and 193d Gun Battalions, also manned mainly by fuzz-faced boys, were told to "bracket and lay off those sleeves" to save time consumed in target replacement.

Although the shooting was, in the words of Brig. Gen. John B. Moore, the brigade's commanding general, "the best I've ever seen at any Guard encampment," Delaware had its problems.

First, the deployment of troops and equipment over an area that stretched from Fort Miles, at the mouth of the Delaware River, to Dewey Beach, about 10 miles south, to Bethany, about 15 miles farther down the coast.

Second in line of training troubles was the fact that impact areas put an overlay on one of the biggest commercial and pleasure fishing spots on the East Coast. This, in addition to the recurrent complaints of boat operators, complicated things by calling for special safety procedures.

The third crimp in Delaware's style came from the repairs of the Indian River Inlet Bridge that spans a deep stream leading to the ocean. The bridge was not available to vehicular traffic, and supply and liaison vehicles were forced to take a 40-mile detour on runs from Fort Miles to Bethany Beach.

But none of these offered an insurmountable barrier.

Brigade staff officers put their heads together and directed the laying of direct phone lines between headquarters at Miles and group and battalion CPs down the coast. A shuttle-bus was also instituted so that liaison personnel could cut in half the time required to detour the inlet.

To get around the fishing fleet problem, firing of all weapons was held only in the afternoon and early evening —the period when boats were out to sea and clear of the impact areas.

For other vessels that happened along during the shooting, a Regular Army liaison plane and safety boats hurried to warn them off. Interruptions due to these wanderers were few as a result.

Fishing craft operating out of the inlet and from other points adjacent to the firing lines were informed daily as to the schedule of shooting. When weather cancelled operations for two days, that information was posted as quickly as possible.

All units except the brigade headquarters and the state staff moved directly into bivouac on the first three days of the encampment. In that period, guns were emplaced, communications established, and ammo dumps prepared.

From bivouac, troops with the gun battalions moved into permanent shelter at Bethany Beach and the automatic weapons outfits took over barracks at Fort Miles. Each morning troops at both sites entrucked for the firing points. Morning sessions were devoted to schools on everything from first aid to field fortifications, then after noontime chow, crews went to their guns for four to five hours of practice.

At both points, sections of the 262d Ordnance Medium Maintenance Company set up machine shops to handle part replacements or repair. The 361st Signal Radar Unit operated between the two ranges.

Probably the biggest training impetus was given all outfits when on the second day of the encampment the 736th Gun Battalion and the 361st Signal Radar Unit were given notice they would be called into full-time Army duty at an early date.

The Korean show, in the opinion of old-timers in the brigade, was brought much closer to home when other outfits saw their buddies in the 736th and 361st start a lot of letter-writing as the first step in settling affairs at home.

As soon as the 736th returned to its home armory in Wilmington, applications for enlistment ran high, the concensus among recruits being "we're going to be drafted anyhow —so why not go with a home-town outfit?"

The 361st had no recruiting problems and was, according to Second Army training teams helping out on the range, "ready for combat at any time."

Both outfits are now in their first training period with the Army at Camp Gordon, Ga., where many of their officers trained in World War II.

Lt. Col. Frank T. Lynch, commanding officer of the 736th, had this to say about the highly effective fire put up by his gun crews:

"They're young, yes, and most of them never heard a shot fired by somebody with a hard nose. But they're all smart and tough—we won't take drugstore cowboys and eight-balls —and they get the knack fast. Let me work them out for awhile and you'll see one of the hottest antiaircraft artillery outfits in the world."

On Lynch's last day of firing this summer, his outfits backed up his boast by knocking a half-dozen targets into the ocean.

"You see?" the colonel grinned. "You just can't make 'em bracket."

Exercise Metro

The 35th AAA Brigade, Fort Meade, Maryland, Colonel Pierre B. Denson, commanding, conducted EXERCISE METRO in Washington, D. C., and vicinity during the period September 11 to 23. The following units participated:

19th AAA Group, Colonel Harold P. Gard, commanding
503d AAA Operations Detachment, Major Alfred J. Montrone, commanding
4th AAA AW Battalion, Lt. Colonel Chester T. Barton, commanding
39th AAA AW Battalion, Lt. Colonel Nyles W. Baltzer, commanding
70th AAA Gun Battalion, Lt. Colonel Francis G. Gregory, Jr., commanding
75th AAA Gun Battalion, Lt. Colonel Peter L. Urban, commanding

The 85th Bombing Squadron, Light, from Langley AFB, Virginia, participated in the exercise, simulating air attacks night and day on objectives in the defended area. In conjunction with the Eastern Air Defense Command and the 647th Aircraft Warning Squadron, the Brigade tested the early warning service, communications, and unit efficiency in the antiaircraft defense.

The primary purpose of the exercise was to gain experience in the problems involved in the establishment of a defense in a metropolitan area. Similar exercises are planned for other metropolitan areas.

As the Brigade moved to positions the weather cooperated to furnish interest in the form of steady rains which continued throughout the first week. Old soldiers and recruits alike weathered it and were rewarded in the last week with better luck.

Colonel Denson and his troops received many distinguished visitors.

ROTC SUMMER CAMP
FORT MEADE, MD.

By Colonel M. A. Hatch, Arty.

The AAA ROTC Summer Camp for the First, Second, Third and Fourth Armies was conducted at Fort Meade during the period 17 June to 29 July. It was conducted jointly with Infantry ROTC units. The author served as the Senior AAA Instructor. A résumé of the highlights in successful achievements, as well as a few of the difficulties and disappointments, may be of interest.

At a planning conference at Second Army Headquarters in March we were advised that we were to be restricted in our service practice to three specific afternoons in the third week of camp: July 5th, 6th and 7th. No alternative dates were permitted. These restrictions were the result of objections by local commercial fishing and resort operators and conflicts with National Guard firing dates.

The primary benefit of an antiaircraft camp is the AAA firing. To hold it in the middle of camp is undesirable; to limit the prescribed 65 hours to a maximum of 18 is deplorable, especially when uncertain weather, safety of the field of fire and other factors are sure to reduce the time even further. The superior conditions at Ft. Bliss are well known. The very fine range at Haven, Wisconsin, on the shore of Lake Michigan was used last year and found to be so good and free from interference that the lease was renewed for five years. All this and more was reported through Fifth and Second Armies to the Field Forces. The result was an indication that some other site might be considered next year.

As it turned out, we were rained out only one day of the three. In addition, 4 hours were lost because of unsafe field of fire. Tow target trouble and waiting for new sleeves to replace those shot down accounted for 2½ hours.

After returning to my home station from the Second Army conference I revised the Master Schedule, prepared tentative weekly schedules and contacted PMS&T's concerned to ascertain the best specialties of their instructors who were due to attend camp. From this information instruction teams were planned and members notified of their committee assignments. Also, PMS&T's were given available information for use in briefing their students prior to camp.

The instruction staff reported for duty at Ft. Meade five days before the opening date of the camp. Some revision was necessary in the detailed schedules because of changes in dates of planned demonstrations by supporting troops and in disapproval by higher authority of some of the planned instruction. This latter included elimination of interior guard duty. It had been planned to help the hard pressed antiaircraft troops by guarding their equipment, spotted for drill purposes in the ROTC area, and at the same time providing future officers with valuable experience. It is believed that commissioned officers should have some background experience as privates and noncommissioned officers of the guard. However, this was not included in the Department of the Army program for summer camp.

In view of the limited time allotted for regular service practice it was hoped to be able to take the students to A. P. Hill for demonstration and practice in ground firing with antiaircraft weapons. However, since this again is not provided in the training directive and would have involved additional expense, it was also disapproved by Second Army.

The camp was organized along regimental lines. There were two battalions of infantry and one of antiaircraft. Senior instructors were battalion commanders and were concerned primarily with training. The camp headquarters functioned as a regimental headquarters and relieved the battalion commanders from the bulk of administrative details. There were 450 students in the AAA battalion, divided into three batteries.

The 90mm guns were set up at Bethany Beach. Two batteries of matériel were available, less one gun manned by OR personnel. The automatic weapons firing point was about ten miles away near Rehobeth Beach. One battery of matériel was manned by ROTC and one battery by OR personnel. Both 40mm and M55 Cal. .50 MG's were fired. Rotation of personnel was effected after each course. Maximum instructional benefit was the object rather than target practice excellence.

Because the service firing was held in the middle of the camp period it was desirable to emphasize some other phase of training as a second climax. Therefore, much of the time that would otherwise have been devoted to service firing was utilized in preparation for and execution of the prescribed field exercises. Major D. W. Malone did a fine job in planning the problem involving the defense of certain corps units in a defensive situation. Students were given their assignments on Friday afternoon of the fifth week, after they had completed necessary ground reconnaissance for positions. The exercise took place Monday and Tuesday of the sixth week. Matériel was dug into field positions, L-16s "strafed" positions at dusk on Monday and at dawn on Tuesday. During the hours of darkness on Monday, all units were tested by a force of aggressors furnished by the 3d Cavalry supporting troops. Instructors were assigned as Colonel Melton A. Hatch graduated from the U. S. Military Academy in 1918 and entered the CAC. During World War II he served as the Antiaircraft Officer and Deputy Chief of Staff of the Eighth Army in the Far East. He now serves as the PMS&T at the University of Illinois.

umpires. There was very little sleep Monday night. Students found that doing the job in the field was much tougher than they imagined from reading about it. Nearly all the expected mistakes were made by some cadets at some time. These, of course, were reviewed at the critique. The students appreciated the great value of the lessons learned.

There were a number of demonstrations on subjects not prescribed in Army Training Program No. 145-3. These included 120mm, AAOR, a trip to Aberdeen Proving Ground and small day and night infantry demonstrations followed by practical problems.

One afternoon of the fifth week was devoted to a mass athletic meet. Every antiaircraft student participated in two events. The primary benefits were in the preparatory tryouts and training and in acquainting future athletic officers with the mechanics of running this type of athletic meet. Altogether 84 events were run off, many simultaneously, and at a stepped up tempo entirely foreign to the conventional type of meet. Many of the events were taken from TM 21-221. Others were the brain children of our able athletic officer, Captain Kaltenbach. Excitement was great as evidenced by the comments and attention given to the master scoreboard. Competition was keen and the outcome undecided till near the end. The famous pie-eating contest climaxed the day.

Special effort was made throughout the camp to utilize students to the maximum in positions of authority and responsibility. Changes were made weekly. More frequent changes would have been undesirable in that the time would have been too short for real accomplishment. Wherever practicable students were used as instructors. Over 100 were used in the first two weeks alone. For weapons and communications, for example, each battery was divided into ten sections. The committees concerned had to work overtime in training the instructors after hours in preparation for their duties. By these means each student was given a number of assignments involving some practical application of leadership.

Special attention was given to make every hour count, rain or shine. One whole afternoon, and many other intervals on the firing ranges, were lost to shooting because of inclement weather and other causes. Such time was utilized in instruction in nomenclature, orientation, tracked vehicle instruction, additional instruction on the radar and M-9 director and in T.I.P. presentations prepared and staged by students.

A 16mm motion picture record was made of the camp. After spoilage and necessary cutting about 800 feet of good film resulted. This should be of considerable value and interest on the campus, especially for those anticipating next summer's camp.

The outstanding instruction of the training committees and the exceptional support given by the personnel of the 19th AAA Group, 3d Armor Group, and the 11th Airborne Division made possible an interesting and successful camp.

Cadets from the following AAA ROTC units participated in the camp:

University of Alabama
University of Cincinnati
The Citadel
University of Delaware
Florida A & M
Fordham University
Georgia Institute of Technology
Hampton Institute
University of Illinois
University of Maine
Michigan State College
University of Minnesota
Mississippi State College
University of New Hampshire
Utah State Agricultural College
Virginia Polytechnic Institute
Washington University

More than four hundred students successfully completed summer encampment.

Artillery School Changes

The Artillery Officers Advanced Course, now in progress at Fort Sill, will be divided into two sections about 6 October. Thereafter the Antiaircraft officers will go to Fort Bliss for a six months' course in Antiaircraft. Field Artillery officers will remain at Fort Sill for a like course in Field Artillery subjects.

This course was originally programmed for 42 weeks, with roughly one-third of the time allotted each to common subjects, Antiaircraft, and Field Artillery. This program intended to have all officers take the instruction in all three fields. The change will take place upon completion of the common subject instruction.

The change was approved by the Chief, Army Field Forces to provide intensive instruction in their respective fields for both the Antiaircraft and the Field Artillery officers. It is understood that the change was dictated by immediate requirements for expansion, and that it does not reflect any change in the long-range plans to achieve a genuine integration into one Artillery.

Specialist courses for motor officers, motor sergeants, motor mechanics, FA and AAA gun mechanics, communication and meteorological specialists will be conducted at Fort Sill. Radar, electronics, and guided missile specialists will receive their training at Fort Bliss.

Typical Faults and Failures AAA Automatic Weapons

By Captain Henry A. Oehrig, Arty.

In this article we shall cover the typical personnel faults and matériel defects noted in the antiaircraft automatic weapon firing and maintenance at one of our busy summer camps. Corrective measures are also indicated. In most of the units involved the men were comparatively inexperienced, though quite intelligent and enthusiastic. The observations made are quite applicable in the training program in which we are now entering. Other articles in the JOURNAL cover the commendable progress which was made by determined efforts.

Naturally, the salt spray and sand at the seashore firing point had a terrific effect on the matériel. The units had such heavy training schedules that they initially allowed only one hour a day for maintenance of equipment. This was inadequate and the guns soon began to show the effects. The maintenance period had to be increased to two full hours per day. During the night and early morning hours salt spray came in over the shore and permeated into every nook and corner of the matériel, so that rust formed overnight. This plus the blown sand caused a very serious problem. Every morning it was necessary to completely strip down the equipment and clean it thoroughly. All parts were freely coated with light oil before reassembling, especially the bolt and top plate cover of the caliber .50 machine gun. The lower chassis and top carriage also required careful cleaning. The sand, salt spray, and film that had formed during the night on all the matériel had to be removed carefully.

Matériel deficiencies noted on the 40mm gun were: check lever pins sheared off; catch head release pins sheared; broken closing springs; and spline shaft pins severed. Ordnance personnel had to replace two defective oil gears on the firing line. The fire control electrician made minor adjustments on others. Three directors had to go to Ordnance for repair due to short circuits. Elevation switches jumped out quite often during firing; this was corrected by wiring down the switch each time a course was fired. Perhaps an adjustment could be made on the equipment to prevent this nuisance.

On the caliber .50 machine guns there were several driving rod springs and driving rods, weak or broken, that had to be replaced; this was done immediately on the line.

It was quite apparent that most of the trouble encountered was due to the using personnel. Chiefs of section did not sound off the commands effectively. More emphasis should be placed on discipline within the section during daily drill. Chiefs of sections should be trained and required to run the sections. The safety officers (line of metal) should let the chiefs of section run the gun crews and not interfere, except in safety procedure. More initiative, responsibility, and respect should be given the section leaders.

Usually the battery officers acted as line of metals officers. They should hold critiques immediately after the course is over and correct all mistakes, including those made by the chiefs of section.

Gunners should be alert at giving "cease fire" should the gun go beyond the limit stakes. Gunners consistently failed to engage the azimuth clutch within the limit of safety, thus failing to get those important first rounds up there on the approaching leg for the first possible "fly-through"; usually they opened up about midpoint. The majority of gunners neglected to check recoil after each course. Some did not know the proper method of checking level of oil in recoil cylinder. It is the gunner who emplaces the gun and levels it, not the chief of section; and it is his duty to know how to perform this important function. It is, however, the responsibility of the chief of section to check the level and an officer should double check this. Gunners quite often neglected to check the elevation clutch after it was engaged. The results were obvious.

Many courses were wasted because the loader and firer failed to feed the first round on the loading tray, due to incorrect handling of ammunition. Too often he neglected to disengage the hand operating lever and put it in the vertical position. Frequently he failed to place the fire lever on "safe" after firing the course, thus breaking one of the most important safety regulations. In several instances the loader and firer did not have the feed control thumb lever to the left; and, the old standby, he allowed cartridge clips to get under the firing pedal, causing the piece to misfire. Some new loaders and firers continue to watch the tracers and the target instead of feeding the gun; consequently, the rate of fire was very irregular. In a number of cases the weapon jammed due to incorrect loading. The old phrase "keep it nose heavy" still holds! Much time and stress must be placed on these points before allowing a number seven man to fire the 40mm gun.

Ammo handlers were observed watching tracers instead of handing ammunition to the loader and firer! Also they were handing it incorrectly, that is, backwards, which naturally caused delay, confusion, and a poor rate of fire. Clipping of 40mm ammo was poor and the handling was too rough and careless.

As for the director crews (units had both M-5 A1 and M-5 A2 Directors) there were many significant errors made that could have been corrected before firing. The range spotters and range setters, depending on the director used, were not observing tracers at target to make spot corrections. Sometimes they were not waiting until trackers sounded off "on target" before repeating command. They also made spot corrections too erratic during the excitement of firing. It was found that a special class of instruction had to be given the range spotters and range setters after several days of firing to get the hits and fly-throughs desired. By this time the sections as a whole were obtaining line shots and the tracking had smoothed out considerably. The class was conducted at one of the directors. Great pains were taken to explain the exact errors that were observed being made by the range spotters and range setters during the previous day's firing. Also the errors made by other members of the range section were discussed. Spot corrections were discussed and explained in detail. Questions were welcomed and answered freely. This proved to be very satisfactory and helped most of the units in their firing.

Some of the errors observed made by the azimuth and elevation trackers were: (1) leaving rate in directors, (2) not tracking steadily (this was usually corrected after a few days on the range), and (3) turning switch off before pulling clutch out.

Range adjusters did not know how to collimate range finders, and during firing made too great a change in altitude for constant altitude courses. In several instances the director range switch was turned on before coincidence was obtained. The range jumped to maximum and the tracers were then observed two-thirds of the way up the cable. Such errors not only endanger the tow plane, but also may damage the range limit stops in the director as well.

Power plant operators were not alert in observing chief of section commands, and did not check the readings on the voltmeter and ammeter. When the power plant was not in use, operators failed to turn off the gas. Some operators had main load switches on when starting and stopping the unit.

Checking the level and orientation by the gun crews must be stressed continually, because they just don't understand the necessity or importance of accuracy. Invariably it was noted that a gun was out of level or out of orientation. Crews are not familiar with the three methods of orientation; especially, one pole parallelism and scribe mark parallelism. In fact the majority of units needed a great deal of instruction and training in all methods of orientation and procedure of orientation. Until this is obtained and understood there can be no good shooting. This holds true for trial fire, as most crews had not the least conception of what trial fire was or what they were doing it for. The trackers have to be thoroughly familiar with what they are looking for, and then be perfectly honest and draw the exact path of the tracer observed on the prepared sketch of reticle, not what they would like to have seen.

There was a tendency to neglect the M-55s, and most of the training was on the 40mm guns. This of course is definitely wrong, for the M-55 is equally as important a fire unit as the 40mm gun. Its crew should receive the same amount of training as the 40mm gun crews. Instructors consequently found the majority of MG gunners making innumerable mistakes, such as: not cleaning the barrels from the breech end; making solenoid adjustments with the power charger not running; running the mount with power charge off; trying to adjust solenoids with interrupter switch set for use in truck; backplate locks on lower guns wrong so that they would hit base of mount when the guns were elevated; bolt switches in the incorrect position for feeding; front and rear stop pawls reversed; bolt switches reversed; top covers not secure; and ammo loaded upside down. During firing, assistant MG gunners watched tracers instead of guns. The links and ammo were dirty causing stoppages.

The majority of the MG crews were unfamiliar with orientation, headspace and timing adjustments, and tests and adjustments for the M-55 mount. A complete understanding of the Mark XI sight was another noted weakness, and a working knowledge of the power charger was lacking. Therefore, the instructors had to spend a good bit of time on some phases that could have been covered at the armory before coming to the range. "T" blocks had to be made on the line as most of the time the units had not brought them along.

Line of metal officers, since they are drawn from the unit firing, must be well briefed and thoroughly conscious of the importance and seriousness of their job. In general, safety officers were careless in observing safety limits of fire and failed to pull the loaders and firers foot off firing pedal upon receiving command to "cease fire." Some of the safety officers were more interested in observing tracers than the safety measures of the firing point. Telephone operators on the safety phones were not always on the phones nor were they alert enough in warning the line of metals officer of the "cease fire" command; they did not always watch the tower for forthcoming signals. Guns were frequently left loaded after a course was fired, and the command was given "rear of piece, fall in." The fire lever was left on single fire instead of safe. Several times the operating handle was left in the forward position after a course was fired. More than once a loaded gun was pointed toward troops at the rear. In target practice the correction is obvious and simple. However, positive attention is required. In battle this matter is more difficult, and it is imperative to prevent needless fire on friendly troops or installations.

In all AAA automatic weapon fire there is an unfailing tendency to shoot behind the target. The gunner, or the range setter, or whoever adjusts the fire has a natural tendency to sense the tracer as having reached the target before it actually does, and consequently his adjustment places the stream of fire behind the target. This error increases progressively at ranges beyond 600 yards. This tendency is even more pronounced in battle than it is in target practice, because the gun crews will fire at excessive ranges until they are better trained.

In target practice the corrective action is to assign a capable coach to each weapon. For each course he takes position well out in the direction toward which the target is flying; at least 75 yards, and further if the range is over 1,000 yards. He notes the stream of fire through the course and comes in immediately to coach the gunner or other crew member who adjusts fire. He has been in a better position to observe the fire accuracy. The weapons should be separated sufficiently to facilitate the identification of the stream of fire from each gun and the coach should concentrate his attention on the fire from his own gun.

With well trained crews antiaircraft automatic weapons have deadly effectiveness against enemy planes within range. With poorly trained crews the fire is sad. Everybody on the battlefield can see that it is sad, and don't think they will hesitate to tell you about it!

Texas Artillery Foiled A Yank Invasion

By Major John B. B. Trussell, Jr., Arty.

Civil War lore is rich in heroic charges and knightly heroes. Yet the action which as much as any other catches the imagination was an unromantic slugging match. More than a gallant gesture, it has a sound claim to a place in history because, for the number of men involved, it was one of the war's most significant engagements.

By 1863, Union forces had occupied much of the Deep South. Texas, practically untouched by war, remained a Confederate source of men and supplies, so General N. P. Banks, commanding Federal forces in Louisiana, planned an expedition against Texas for summer of that year, using 5,000 troops under General William B. Franklin. Admiral Farragut furnished eighteen transports and four gunboats under Captain Francis Crocker—the Arizona, Granite City, Sachem and, flying the commodore's pennant, the Clifton. Franklin would steam to the Texas coast, disembark and march overland to capture Beaumont. A larger force would follow through Louisiana to join him.

Success seemed probable. Few Confederate units barred the way: Home guards garrisoned Beaumont; recruits and militia protected Houston; and Galveston, vulnerable to attack from the sea, must retain all available forces for its own defense. Beaumont's principal protection against seaborne attack was the swampy, bayou-cut plain lying between it and the Gulf. The only feasible approach was through Sabine Pass to Sabine Lake, up the lake's western shore, then cross-country for some fifteen miles. To block Sabine Pass the Confederates had erected a three-sided earthwork which, Banks and Franklin were sure, could easily be by-passed.

No hint of the expedition reached Texas. In any case, no troops, time or material were available to strengthen the defense. The fort's weakness was an accepted thing: its officers, advised to abandon it, had put the question to a vote; the men elected to remain.

• This garrison was composed of the First Texas Heavy Artillery's Company F, otherwise called the Davis Guards. Colonel Joseph J. Cook, the Annapolis graduate commanding, had instilled in his men unusually high standards of discipline. Veteran gunners, the regiment as a whole and Company F individually had been highly commended for gallantry and marksmanship on several occasions. Company F had forty-two enlisted men, a captain (F. H. Odlum) and a lieutenant (R. W. Dowling), four smoothbore guns (two twenty-four pounders and two thirty-two pounders) and two thirty-two pounder howitzers.

The task force approached the coast on the night of September 7. When it was light enough to see, Lieutenant Dowling (who commanded the earthwork in Captain Odlum's absence) reached his decision: against one gunboat alone he might have tried to bluff by putting up a show of force; but against four his only hope was an ambush.

The Clifton approached first. For an hour, from beyond the Confederates' range, she shelled the fort, within whose walls, spotters reported, shells repeatedly burst; but no gun spoke in reply and no sign of life was seen. Crocker decided that the earthwork had been abandoned. Nevertheless, when the Clifton led the Sachem and Arizona into the Pass, Crocker proceeded slowly, observing from a distance until midafternoon.

Dowling, fortunate in his unit's fine discipline, withheld fire. The men stood silently to their guns. Only when all three of the gunboats were in reach did Dowling order, "Commence firing!"

Crocker brought his ships in to a range of one thousand yards. Though his weight of metal was crushingly superior, every action the Davis Guards had fought had earned them praise for superior gunnery. Eventually their fire began to tell. After a little more than an hour's exchange, a rebel round struck the Sachem's boilers. As she drifted helplessly, her captain could surrender or be slaughtered. He struck his colors.

Determined to end the fight, Crocker steamed the Clifton up to extremely short range. But as he brought her broadside to bear, one of Dowling's rounds found her boilers and she ran aground. No course remained but to join the Sachem in surrender.

The Arizona, already damaged, withdrew to the waiting convoy. The Granite City had been on her way in when the Clifton and Sachem surrendered; not wishing to brave singly the opposition which had been too much for the other three gunboats combined, her captain fled without coming in range.

The fight was over. Amazingly, after an hour and a half's intensive bombardment, not a Confederate had even been wounded. But how were they to take into custody prisoners numbering perhaps five times their own strength? To make his garrison appear strong, Dowling posted a few men as sentries where they could be seen from the ships, and with the rest took charge of some 150 prisoners. Fortunately for the Confederates, reinforcements brought by the cannonade kept the Federals from discovering their captors' numerical weakness.

Throughout the fleet, three Union officers and 94 enlisted men lay dead and approximately 200 wounded. The Confederates captured eighteen cannon and quantities of ammunition, food and other supplies. General Franklin, most of his naval protection lost, could only return to New Orleans. There were, of course, charges and countercharges regarding responsibility for the failure. Some Union officers claimed that a second fort, on the other side of the Pass, and Confederate gunboats had joined the defense. Certainly it is odd that, if Southern forces besides the Davis Guards were present, they were silent when the laurels were passed out.

The Federal task force's repulse was a real victory for the South, for had Franklin's plan succeeded, Texas would almost certainly have been overrun. The Davis Guards could not alter the war's outcome, but they altered its course to the extent that they bought immunity from further major Federal attacks on the state for almost a year. Invasion and occupation came only when the entire Confederacy was crumbling.

At Jefferson Davis's behest, each participant in the action was awarded a silver medal, inscribed "D. G.", for Davis Guards, and "Sabine Pass, September 8, 1863," the only medals ever presented by the Confederacy. Few medals have been earned against heavier odds.

"The main benefit of writing is to the writer. Before he can write clearly he must know the facts and have them logically arranged in his own mind. When I found my knowledge deficient in any matter connected with my work, I planned and wrote an article about it, after collecting and arranging the facts. I recommend the policy."—Rear Admiral Lucius W. Johnson, USN, Retired, in The Military Surgeon.

In this connection we are happy to report a splendid improvement in the number and quality of articles received for the JOURNAL. KEEP IT GOING.

If you have found a way to make the guns more accurate, tell us about it, whether it is a simple step, or a comprehensive program. Our readers prefer short articles, brief and to the point.

We need more articles on the maintenance of antiaircraft and motor equipment. During the last war we had too many guns and vehicles on the dead line. What are the essential factors to prevent that in the future?

To our readers in Korea we appeal for stories and photographs about the actions in ground support or in local defense. We need to hear about the mistakes, as well as the successful achievements. We are interested in enemy tactics, both by the main forces and by guerrillas.

A few healthy arguments would add tone to these columns. If you have an idea or a gripe that sounds like constructive criticism, send it in.

Notify the Journal of your change of address.

THE INFANTRY DIVISION

By Lieutenant Colonel Dorsey E. McCrory, Inf.

Infantry is the basic combat arm. The primary purpose of other ground arms and services is to project the infantry forward from objective to objective until the final objective is captured and enemy ground forces either surrender or are destroyed. It follows, then, that the infantry division is the basic combat organization in our ground forces. The infantry division is the smallest unit composed of all the essential ground arms and services which can conduct, by its own means, operations of general importance. It can:

1. Strike and penetrate effectively.
2. Maneuver readily.
3. Readily absorb and employ reinforcing units.
4. Sustain action in any type of terrain.
5. Act alone or as part of a larger force.

A number of changes in the organization of the infantry division manifested themselves as desirable during World War II. When the war was over in Europe and while troops were being shifted to the Pacific Theater, the more pressing of these changes were made. They included substitution of self-propelled weapons for towed weapons in the antitank and cannon companies of the infantry regiment, inclusion of the newly developed 57mm and 75mm recoilless rifles in the infantry battalion, an increase in wire construction facilities in the signal company and the increase of the military police platoon to a company. But it was not until 1946, following termination of World War II, that the present division organization was formulated. It is the result of the best thoughts evolved from war experiences. It is based on recommendations of the General Board of the European Theater, the Patch-Simpson Board, recommendations of commanders of all grades and, more specifically, of the Infantry Conference held at Fort Benning, Georgia, in June 1946, for the specific purpose of formulating its postwar organization. As with any other organization, changes, relatively minor to date, continue to be made.

Organization

Chart I shows the organization of the postwar infantry division. It consists of division headquarters, division headquarters company, a signal company, a military police company, a reconnaissance company, a band, a division headquarters medical detachment, an ordnance company, a quartermaster company, a replacement company, 3 identical infantry regiments, a medium tank battalion, a medical battalion, a combat engineer battalion and division artillery.

Division Headquarters

Division headquarters (Chart II) consists of the division commander, the assistant division commander, the chief of staff, who supervises and coordinates all staff activities within the division headquarters, and the general and special staff sections. The general staff sections, in their respective fields of personnel and administration (G-1), intelligence (G-2), operations and training (G-3), and logistics (G-4), are the principal agencies of the division commander for planning, coordinating and supervising the activities of the division. The special staff sections are specialists in their respective fields and are the advisers to the division commander in matters pertaining thereto. The division signal officer, provost marshal, ordnance officer, quartermaster officer, engineer officer and division artillery commander act as special staff officers in addition to their duty of commanding their unit. The light aviation section and the public information section are postwar additions to the division headquarters.

The division headquarters company is the service unit for division headquarters. It consists of a company headquarters, a mess platoon, a transportation platoon, a defense platoon and a light aviation section. The defense platoon has three rifle squads and an antimechanized section armed with three 75mm recoilless rifles with which to establish local ground defense of division headquarters. The light aviation section is equipped with eight liaison type airplanes for courier and reconnaissance purposes.

The signal company contains the division signal officer's section, a headquarters platoon, a signal supply photo and maintenance section, a construction platoon and an operations platoon. This unit establishes communications within division headquarters and to subordinate units working directly under division headquarters. The construction platoon has seven wire construction teams and three wire maintenance teams with which to establish and maintain wire communications. The operations platoon consists of a message center and messenger section, a radio relay section, a radio section and a telephone and teletype section. Radio relay and teletypewriter communication facilities are postwar additions to the company and likewise to the division. Also new are six 35mm still cameras, one 35mm movie camera and still picture processing facilities in the signal supply photo and maintenance section. These cameras may be mounted in airplanes and are intended for taking pictures for current and historical uses.

The military police company includes the provost marshal's section, a company headquarters, three traffic platoons and a police platoon. This unit, in the area between the regimental rear boundaries and the division rear boundary, is responsible for maintaining law and order, cooperating with civilian police agencies, controlling traffic, apprehending stragglers and deserters and guarding prisoners of war. The World War II platoon was inadequate for these purposes.

The reconnaissance company consists of a company headquarters and three reconnaissance platoons. Each platoon has a scout section with four ¼-ton trucks, a tank section with two light tanks, a rifle squad and a support squad armed with an 81mm mortar. Light tanks and full-tracked armored personnel carriers replace the half-track and armored car of the World War II unit. This unit has the mobility and fire power with which to secure information of the enemy and communication facilities with which to get that information back to division headquarters in time to be of use. Its mobility and fire power make it effective for preventing enemy ground reconnaissance of its parent division and also make it capable of combat action. Since its personnel are highly trained and difficult to replace, a division commander would hesitate in committing it to sustained combat unless the situation was an emergency.

The band is the standard division band consisting of two warrant officers and 68 enlisted men. This is a valuable and versatile unit within the division. Not everyone understands the value of the band to a division during combat. It is true that there is little place for horn playing in modern battle. But the band provides the only reserve of labor within the division, it is useful for augmenting military police, for guarding assembly areas and command posts. Many members of World War II bands wear the Purple Heart decoration because the band was the usual source of additional aid men and litter bearers when fighting was heavy and casualties surpassed the ability of medical personnel to care for them.

The division headquarters medical detachment operates an aid station, provides emergency medical treatment, and supervises the sanitation of the separate companies of the division which have no organic medical personnel.

The ordnance company includes the division ordnance officer's section, a company headquarters, a supply platoon and two maintenance platoons. In comparision with the World War II company, supply facilities have been materially increased to provide for the increased strength and fire power of the division, and maintenance facilities and equipment have been increased to provide maintenance for the increased number of weapons and vehicles in the division including a large number of full-tracked vehicles.

The quartermaster company contains the office of the division quartermaster, a company headquarters, a supply platoon, three truck platoons and a field service platoon. The supply platoon has Class I, Class II and IV and Class III supply sections. Each truck platoon is equipped with sixteen 2½-ton trucks and one-ton trailers. These constitute the primary source of cargo vehicles within the division. The field service platoon, a completely new addition to the company, has bath, laundry and graves registration sections.

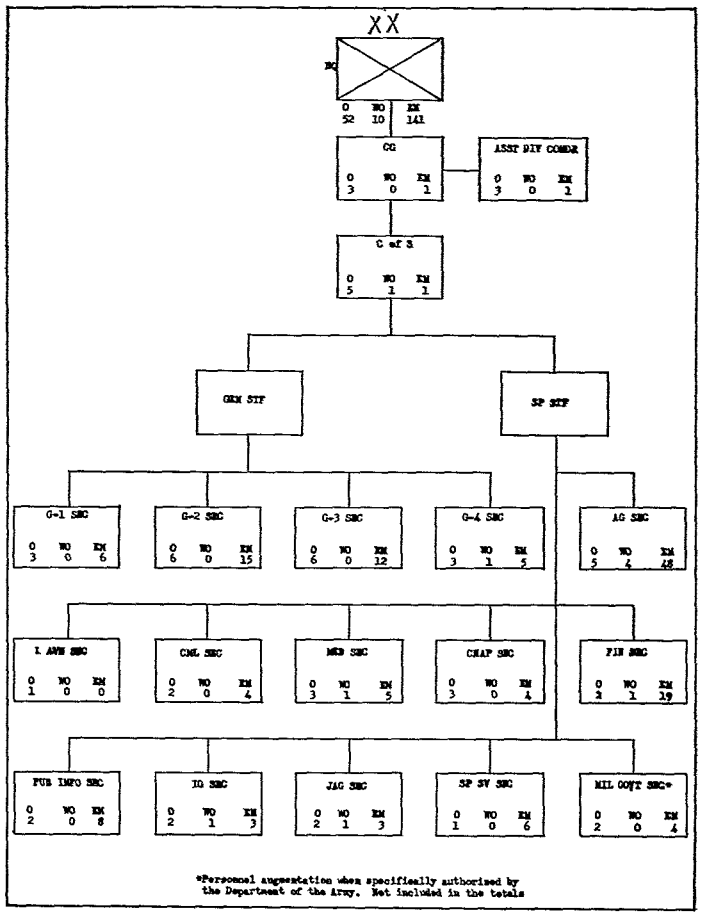

Chart II

The replacement company is a postwar addition to the division to meet the pressing need evidenced during the last war for an organization to administratively process, to provide special equipment and training, to battle indoctrinate and to forward to units of the division replacements received. These functions during the last war were performed, if at all, by inadequately trained and equipped special duty personnel. As a result it was found that if a replacement joining front line combat units lived through the first ten days of combat he had a good chance of survival. During this period such replacements completed self-indoctrination but casualties among them during the period were excessive. The company has a company headquarters and cadre personnel for four platoons, each of which is capable of administering approximately fifty replacements at a time.

The Infantry Regiment

An infantry regiment (Chart III) consists of a headquarters and headquarters company, a service company, a heavy mortar company, a medium tank company, a medical company and three identical infantry battalions.

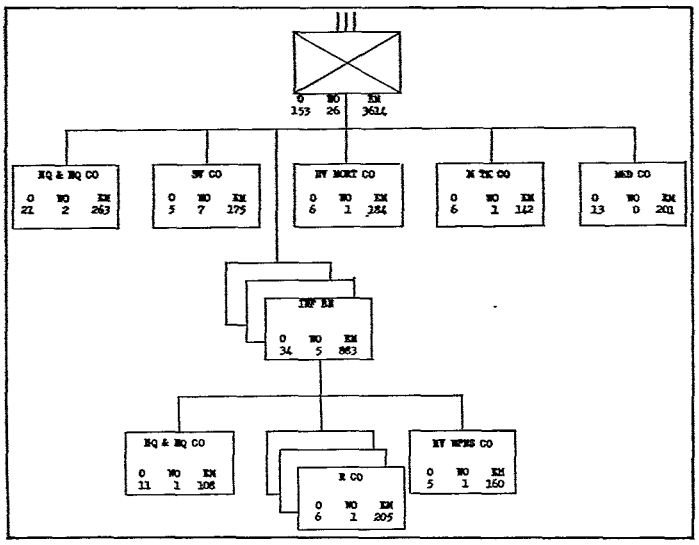

Chart III

The headquarters and headquarters company includes the regimental commander and his commissioned and enlisted staff except the S-4, a counterfire platoon which employs electronic sound locating devices to locate enemy weapons, a security platoon which performs the duties of military police in the regimental area, an intelligence and reconnaissance platoon, an antitank mine platoon and a communication platoon.

The service company consists of a company headquarters which includes the regimental S-4, the regimental administration platoon with personnel, supply and graves registration sections, and the regimental service platoon with tank maintenance and truck maintenance sections as well as gasoline, oil and ammunition vehicles for the companies of the regiment. The tank company and the medical company have organic kitchen trucks; kitchen trucks for all other companies are provided by the service platoon.

The heavy mortar company replaces the cannon company of World War II. It consists of a company headquarters and three platoons each of which is armed with four 4.2-inch mortars. Fire direction center methods are employed in firing. The fire power of a 4.2-inch mortar is comparable to that of a 105mm howitzer.

The medium tank company replaces the antitank company of World War II. It consists of a company headquarters and four platoons each of which is armed with five medium tanks mounting 90mm guns. There are two more of these tanks in company headquarters making a total of 22 tanks in the company. The company has the dual mission of providing antitank defense and close fire support for the regiment.

During World War II a collecting company from the division medical battalion was habitually attached to each infantry regiment. In the postwar regiment a medical company is organic. It consists of a company headquarters, a collecting platoon and three battalion platoons. The collecting platoon contains a collecting station section, a litter bearer section with 24 litter bearers and an ambulance section with nine ¼-ton ambulances. The battalion platoons provide each battalion with an aid station, twelve litter bearers and fifteen company aid men.

An infantry battalion consists of a headquarters and headquarters company, three rifle companies and a heavy weapons company. The headquarters and headquarters company includes the battalion commander and his commissioned and enlisted staff, company headquarters, an intelligence section, a communication platoon and a pioneer and ammunition platoon. The pioneer and ammunition platoon is the battalion version of engineers. It is trained to perform simple engineering tasks, primarily battlefield expedients using any available materials, and in laying and removing mines. One of its most important tasks is the operation of the battalion ammunition supply point.

A rifle company consists of a company headquarters, three rifle platoons and a weapons platoon. A rifle platoon consists of a platoon headquarters, three rifle squads and a weapons squad. The weapons squad, a postwar addition to the platoon, is armed with a light machine gun and a 2.36-inch antitank rocket launcher commonly called the "bazooka." During World War II it was found that a light machine gun was desirable for every engagement of the rifle platoon so one has been made organic to it. The rocket launcher provides the platoon with light, mobile, organic antitank protection. The rifle squad now consists of the squad leader, assistant squad leader, five riflemen and an automatic rifle team of two men or a total of nine men. The World War II squad consisted of twelve men. Combat conclusively proved that eleven other men are too many for one man to control as evidenced by straggling, and the ugly truth is that straggling was by no means unknown in the American Armies of World War II; and as evidenced by the fact that the highest casualty rate of any group in our combat forces was among rifle squad and platoon leaders. They had to expose themselves excessively in moving about, coordinating and controlling their overly large commands. The weapons platoon, armed with three 60mm mortars in the mortar section and three 57mm recoilless rifles in the 57mm rifle section, provides close fire support for the riflemen.

The heavy weapons company consists of a company headquarters, a machine gun platoon, a mortar platoon armed with four 81mm mortars and a 75mm rifle platoon armed with four 75mm recoilless rifles. The four squads of the machine gun platoon are armed with both the caliber .30 light and heavy machine guns. Both weapons are employed defensively but usually only one, the light gun, is employed offensively, particularly if the situation is fast moving and across country requiring hand carry. A caliber .30 machine gun to replace both the present guns is under development. The heavy weapons company constitutes the battalion commander's primary source of organic fire support.

The medium tank battalion, along with the tank company in each infantry regiment, replaces the tank battalion and tank destroyer battalion habitually attached to infantry divisions in Europe during World War II. It consists of a headquarters and headquarters and service company, three tank companies and a medical detachment. The headquarters and service company, in addition to being the command, administrative and supply unit of the battalion, contains a reconnaissance platoon. Each tank company is identical to the company contained in the infantry regiment. This battalion has the mission of providing antitank defense and close fire support for the division. It provides the division with a highly mobile, heavily armed and armored unit capable of shock action and particularly adapted to counterattack. Tank companies of the battalion may be employed to reinforce the infantry regiments or the entire battalion may be employed with a particular regiment or as all or a part of the division reserve.

With the inclusion of organic medical companies in the infantry regiments, the medical battalion has been reduced to a headquarters and headquarters company, an ambulance company and a clearing company. The headquarters and headquarters company is the command, supply and administrative unit of the battalion. The ambulance company has three platoons of ten ¾-ton ambulances each and the clearing company has three clearing platoons. The clearing station established by each clearing platoon has a normal capacity of approximately 80 patients or an emergency capacity of an additional fifty per cent. A clearing station is the last medical installation through which casualties of the division are processed prior to being evacuated to field army medical installations.

The combat engineer battalion consists of a headquarters and headquarters and service company, four combat companies and a medical detachment. Postwar additions to the headquarters and service company are a bridge platoon, having organic equipment with which it can construct over 300 feet of fixed and floating fifty-ton bridge, and an assault platoon. Engineers are required to perform many tasks under fire to which they are vulnerable. The assault platoon is currently equipped with five dozer mounting medium tanks for performing such tasks. The equipment and maintenance platoon of the headquarters and service company has much heavy construction equipment, such as three cranes and two road graders, which makes the division engineers capable of quite heavy construction tasks. Our World War II engineer battalion had three combat companies and we entered the war thinking an engineer platoon could support an infantry regiment. We soon discovered how wrong we were. With all the tasks that engineers were called upon to perform, such as maintaining roads, executing demolitions, laying and removing mines, removing enemy obstacles and participating in assault crossing of streams and attacks of fortified positions, a company was required to adequately support a regiment. When all three regiments were in action the division engineer was hard pressed for troops for other than combat action such as maintaining the roads in the rear, building the general staff officers' houses on trailers, etc. Four combat companies should afford the division sufficient engineer troops.

Division Artillery

Division Artillery (Chart IV) still includes a headquarters and headquarters battery, three 105mm howitzer battalions, a 155mm howitzer battalion and a medical detachment. Each battalion consists of a headquarters and headquarters battery, three firing batteries and a service battery. In each firing battery the number of howitzers has been increased from four to six so that with an increase of fifteen per cent in personnel strength the fire power of the artillery has been increased by fifty per cent. This increase is reflected by slight increases in strength of the service batteries. In each headquarters battery of the 105mm howitzer battalions, a countermortar section equipped with radar has been added. With this radar the flight of enemy shells can be picked up in the air and by reverse calculations the approximate location of the weapon which fired can be determined. Countermortar fire is then placed on the suspected weapon position. In each of the three firing batteries of the 105mm howitzer battalions are three forward observer sections which provide a section for each rifle company in the division. As it is often necessary for the 155mm howitzer battalion to employ forward observers, two forward observer sections are organic in its headquarters battery. Headquarters battery division artillery and each of the four howitzer battalions still have two liaison airplanes as formerly.

During World War II an AAA automatic weapons battalion was habitually attached to infantry divisions for antiaircraft defense. In the postwar infantry division one of these battalions, self-propelled, is organic to division artillery. It consists of a headquarters and headquarters battery and four firing batteries. Each firing battery is organized into two platoons. Each platoon is armed with four M19's mounting twin 40mm cannons and with four M16's mounting four caliber .50 machine guns. The weapons are capable of both antiaircraft defense and surface firing in close support of infantry or armor.

Summary

The present infantry division, as compared to the World War II infantry division, has increased fire power, increased mobility, includes many new weapons and items of equipment and includes as organic those units formerly habitually attached. This last primarily accounts for an increase in aggregate strength of officers and enlisted men from approximately 16,000 to approximately 19,000. The division was organized and developed based on combat experience in World War II.

Gen. Bradshaw Assigned To EUCOM

Major General Aaron Bradshaw, Jr., well known to the JOURNAL readers as an Antiaircraft Commander in Africa and Europe, has been assigned to duty with EUCOM. With station in Heidelberg he will serve as the Assistant Chief of Staff, G-4. General Bradshaw returned from the European Theater in 1945 and has served since then on the General Staff as Assistant to G-4 in Departmental Headquarters. He has long been actively connected with the JOURNAL, serving as Editor from 1936 to 1940 and as Vice-President of the Association in 1946 and 1947. War decorations: DSM, SS, LM(OLC), BSM, and CR.

Journal Editor Transferred

As we go to press, Colonel William I. Brady, Editor of this JOURNAL from January, 1946 to June, 1950 sails for duty in the Far East. For the Executive Council, and indeed for the entire Association we express appreciation for his outstanding work as Editor. When he undertook the duty the Coast Artillery Journal was suffering a big drop in circulation at the close of the war. Rip Brady, as most of you know him, marched into the problem in his characteristic manner to renew life in the JOURNAL, to stimulate thought on future warfare, and to give the JOURNAL to its readers. By his tireless efforts he rallied the Association behind him to maintain the JOURNAL as a strong medium for antiaircraft artillery. He leaves the JOURNAL in sound financial condition, with a growing circulation, and with active interests in its columns.

BALLOT

UNITED STATES COAST ARTILLERY ASSOCIATION

The President and three members of the Executive Council are to be elected on this ballot, to replace officers whose terms of office expire December 31, 1950.

Please record your vote by making an "X" in the appropriate square or indicate your choice by writing the name of your candidate. Ballots received with signatures, but with no individual votes recorded, will be considered proxies for the President of the Association.

Each candidate was considered in connection with the geographic location of his residence. The Constitution of the Association requires that at least five members of the Council reside in the Washington area, and that at least three of them be on active duty, in order to facilitate the transaction of business.

Ballots received after December 31, 1950, cannot be counted.

Use the ballot below or prepare one to indicate clearly your vote. Mail to the ANTIAIRCRAFT JOURNAL, 631 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Washington 4, D. C.

Gen. Curtis Commands AAA at Camp Gordon, Georgia

Brigadier General Charles C. Curtis of Allentown, Pennsylvania, has returned to active duty in command of the 51st AAA Brigade at Camp Gordon, Georgia.

Having served with the 28th Division in World War I, General Curtis brought the 213th CA (AA), Pennsylvania National Guard, on active duty in 1940. He assumed command of the 33d AAA Brigade and the AAA defenses of San Diego in December 1941.

He later took the 51st AAA Brigade to Europe in 1944 and participated in the Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, and Central Europe Campaigns.

Returning to inactive status in 1946, he was soon drawn back in service in the Guard in command of his 51st AAA Brigade! He was promoted to the grade of Major General in the Pennsylvania National Guard to command all non-divisional units. He gave up that assignment, however, to return to active duty with his 51st AAA Brigade.

The following antiaircraft artillery units of the recently Federalized National Guard are attached to the 51st AAA Brigade at Camp Gordon:

216th AAA Group, Minn., Colonel Edwin R. Bodey
209th AAA Group, N.Y., Colonel Eugene J. Welte
197th AAA Group, N.H., Colonel Albert S. Baker
151st AAA Operations Detachment, Penn.
115th AAA Operations Detachment, Wash.
105th AAA Operations Detachment, N.Y.
173d AAA Operations Detachment, Mass.
238th AAA Gun Bn., Conn., Major J. S. Winthrop
745th AAA Gun Bn., Conn., Lt. Col. G. B. Webster
736th AAA Gun Bn., Del., Lt. Col. F. T. Lynch
703d AAA Gun Bn., Maine, Lt. Col. J. Rossnagel
102d AAA Gun Bn., N.Y., Lt. Col. W. E. Harper
715th AAA Gun Bn., N.Y., Lt. Col. W. H. Uter
707th AAA Gun Bn., Penn., Lt. Col. Francis Fulton, Jr.
705th AAA Gun Bn., R.I., Lt. Col. M. P. DiFusco
711th AAA Gun Bn., Ala., Lt. Col. N. J. Walton
213th AAA Gun Bn., Penn., Lt. Col. Kenneth A. Michael

U. S. Releases Guide For Atomic Defense

Mass public hysteria and thoughtless panic probably would cause more deaths than atom bombs themselves in the event the U. S. was subjected to an atomic attack, according to a new guide to defense planning recently issued by the Defense Department in co-operation with the Atomic Energy Commission.

Proper planning and organization will save many lives which otherwise would be lost, the book, "The Effects of Atomic Weapons," declares.

The book presents data resulting from studies of the bombings in Japan during World War II, and explosions at Alamogordo and Bikini, indicating that advance planning would be of tremendous benefit no matter how severe the attack.

A disciplined civil population could do much to reduce damage and casualties, the book shows.

An atomic bomb bursting high in the air above a target confines the radiation danger to the first few minutes and leaves no lingering contamination, the report states. On the other hand, an underwater or low ground explosion might present a radiation problem for months or even years. These circumstances indicate the need for planning to deal with each type of bombing.

An American city bombed with the type of weapon used in Japan in World War II, could expect demolition of all buildings within a half-mile radius, according to the guide. This type bomb is equal to 20,000 tons of T.N.T.

Buildings between half a mile and a mile and a quarter would be made unsafe for use. Between a mile and a mile and three quarteres, the damage would range from severe to moderate. Brick and stone facing probably would be reduced to rubble.

There would be little hope for the survival of people caught within a half-mile radius of an explosion, the book asserts.

The only radiation danger is direct exposure to gamma rays which are released during the first ten seconds after the explosion. These rays will kill within a radius of 4,000 feet. Even the simplest kind of shelter would provide a great measure of protection, the book says. A cellar so reinforced that it would not cave in might suffice.

Shelters would offer good protection in the case of an underwater or low ground blast. People in such shelters should remain there for two to four hours. As soon as possible afterward, they should scrub themselves thoroughly with soap and water, and discard any clothing that might have been in contact with radioactive dirt or water.—AFPS

New 'Chute May Solve Jump Danger

The Air Force has developed a new automatic parachute which it believes will largely solve the problem of escape from disabled aircraft at high altitudes and terrific speeds.

The new 'chute opens with an appropriate delay after the pilot bails out, and at a proper distance above the earth, relieving the flyer of the necessity for judgment of these factors.

Leaving the plane, the pilot is required only to pull a ball type handle which is connected by cable with the automatic release. The release works only after the pilot is far enough from the plane to prevent entanglement, but high enough to assure a safe landing.

The timing device which provides a safe interval before the 'chute opens, is adjustable to from one to 26 seconds. A delay of five to seven seconds is usually sufficient to reduce the velocity of the fall to a safe degree.

The altitude control prevents operation of the 'chute release above the preset distance from the earth. Before take-off, the control is set for a height of 5,000 feet above the highest point of the terrain over which the plane is expected to fly.

If, for instance, the highest point should be 7,000 feet, the altitude control would be set for 12,000 feet. Should it become necessary to abandon the plane at an altitude of 40,000 feet, the parachute would not open until after a free fall of 28,000 feet.

At 40,000 feet the shock of the 'chute opening is four times greater than at sea level. Also, if the parachute opens at this altitude the descent will take longer and the lack of oxygen and extreme cold would be dangerous.—AFPS

U. S. to Install Radar Sites For Guided Missile Tests

American history is being made in and around the Bahama Islands with Bahamian approval for the U. S. to develop radar-tracking observation stations for its guided missile program.

The Bahamian House of Assembly recently passed a bill implementing a treaty signed by the United States and Great Britain calling for joint development of rockets and other long range guided missiles.

With the go-ahead signal for the 3,000-mile testing range for guided missiles, the Bahamas add another chapter in U. S. history.

The islands already hold a special spot in Americana since it was at San Salvador (Watling) Island that Christopher Columbus first reached the New World in 1492.

The Bahama Islands have an ideal geographic position for the guided missile job. Those nearest to the U. S. lie only 52 miles from the Florida coast, notes the National Geographic Society, while the archipelago's southern extremity, Great Inagua Island, reaches to within a few miles of Cuba and Haiti.—AFPS

22-Pound Field Switchboard Adopted As Standard By Army

A 22-pound field switchboard with twice the capacity of heavier equipment which it will replace has been adopted by the Army as standard equipment, it was announced.

The new switchboard will go into production this year. It has twice the capacity, less than half the weight, and less than one-third the size of the smallest standard field switchboard now used by the Army. In addition, it has retractable cords which stay clear of battlefield mud and water. When not in use, it can be folded into a case and carried like a portable typewriter.

One of the new boards will provide switching service for 12 lines, but it is possible to stack as many as three boards, one above the other, to increase capacity. By slight modification of the boards when stacked, a maximum capacity of 46 lines is possible.

The new equipment was developed by the Signal Corps Engineering Laboratories, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey.

Two boards in current use will be replaced by the new one. One of the older boards weighs 48 pounds and has a capacity of six lines. The other, with a 12-line capacity, weighs 72 pounds.

Officially designated the SB-22/PT ("SB" for switchboard and "PT" for portable telephone), the new equipment is designed to withstand immersion in water in packed condition and to be highly resistant to the effects of extremes of temperature and humidity likely to be encountered in field operations. The board also is designed to withstand vibration and shock of the type normally encountered in transportation, loading or unloading under field conditions, or when dropped by parachute.

Circuit components of the board are contained in units which may quickly and easily be replaced in event of failure. Interchangeability of parts with other types of switchboards will minimize repair and maintenance problems.

U. S. Military Policy: 1950

In the October issue, U. S. Army Combat Forces Journal, General Omar N. Bradley contributes U. S. Military Policy: 1950. This forthright article, which also appears in the October issue of Reader's Digest, is of vital interest to American soldiers and citizens alike.

Election of Officers

Members are urged to use the Association ballot on page 60, and vote. The Nominating Committee has selected a slate. If you like it, support it, because their election is not necessarily assured. This is not a steam-roller affair. Two years ago an interested group elected their own candidate. That interest was fine for the Association, and it also gave the Association an outstanding Council member. VOTE!

THE ORAVISUAL EASEL

offers you all these features . . .

- ★ ALL ALUMINUM. Not a splinter of wood to warp, wear or tear.
- ★ LIGHT AS A FEATHER—almost. Only eight pounds if you want us to be technical.
- ★ RUGGED as the Rock of Gibraltar. It will take the meanest abuse.
- ★ PORTABLE because it folds flat as a pancake. 1½" thick by 38¾" high by 28¾" wide.
- ★ INSTANTANEOUS. You can unfold it and set it up in 5 seconds flat unless you are all thumbs.
- ★ WRITING PAD feature eliminates need for messy blackboard.
- ★ CHART HOLDERS of improved design. Will accommodate many charts at several heights, even if they are as big as the side of a barn.
- ★ TABLE MODEL AND FLOOR MODEL combined in one. It's really tricky.
- ★ HANDSOME. Modern in appearance, satin aluminum finish. As sleek as a greyhound.
- ★ PRACTICAL. Rube Goldberg had no part in its design.
- ★ INDISPENSABLE because a good easel is necessary for conducting many types of conferences and meetings.
- ★ TIME SAVER because it puts an end to improvisation.
