

Äolsharp

Äolus is the Wind God of Greek mythology. As a living being he loves to move around and play with all that crosses his way. In the 19th Century a kind of wind harp could be found in many parks of Germany, England and Scotland. It was called Äolsharfe — Harp of Äolus. In East Asia too those instruments were known in ancient times.

The Äolsharp you see here is made in Germany and seeks to continue this old tradition. The ever changing mood of the wind elicits ever new melodies of overtones, so the listener will be surprised and charmed in ever new ways. Just put it on the balcony, in the tree in front of your house or at an open window.

The Äolsharp is one meter long and made from weather proof material.
